Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please do not allow grizzly bear hunting. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am completely opposed to trophy hunting of grizzly bears or any animal, for that matter. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Killing a creature so that you can mount it on your wall should be a crime.

A healthy ecosystem requires the presence of top predators. Not hunters with rifles, but bears. There are 1.5 Billion cattle in the world and a few thousand grizzlies. That makes grizzly bears exponentially more valuable than a few cattle.

“No Trophy Hunting”

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch’s logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Trophy hunting is reprehensible. You raise more tourism dollars in allowing bears to live. Do the right thing and ban this as other areas have.

No Trophy Hunting . . .
The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Just say no . . . No Trophy Hunting . . .

Speak up for Grizzly Bears!
Tell the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council: “No Trophy Hunting”

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch’s logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your time to protect grizzly bears and cease all trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Please don't allow the hunt to happen.

I am absolutely OPPOSED to any hunting or trophy hunting season for the grizzly bear in Montana. Don't you dare even think of authorizing a hunt. The grizzly needs to be recovered, not killed. Do you think the only value that the grizzly has is if it can be killed? Corridors for grizzlies between habitat blocks should be protected and encouraged, and absolutely no hunting of grizzlies should be allowed!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.
If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please do not allow trophy hunting on bears or other wilflife. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

These beautiful animals were there a lot longer than the killer's were there, so just because you can kill something, doesn't mean you should.

Apex predators are under threat everywhere and should be protected. They are critical parts of the ecosystems they inhabit in ways we are barely beginning to understand. For example, bear scat from river feeders is now understood to be a critical nutrient for mountain forests that can be miles away from the water! People come to Montana to SEE wildlife, and its only 10% or less of people who hunt, and even fewer who hunt bears. Often cubs are left orphaned or abandoned, with slim chances for survival. For all these reasons and more I strongly oppose hunting these magnificent creatures. Let them be and let them LIVE. In economic terms, they are worth more to Montana's eco-tourism then they are dead and mounted.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am opposed to trophy hunting of grizzly bears, or any animals for that matter.

Please do not monetize a decision, but rather gather science based data to determine conservation steps.

Respectfully,

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly Bear population health reflects the positive values of the American people who prioritize STEWARDSHIP over profit or sport. Grizzlies are magnificent representatives of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams

"TROPHY" HUNTING IS SELFISH and reflects low level moral behavior. It is not hunting to survive. WE AS HUMANS ARE BETTER THAN THIS.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am opposed to the hunting of grizzly bears. There aren't enough of them and so this is not a sustainable activity. Given all the pressures of climate change and habitat loss our wildlife is experiencing, hunting by humans for trophies should not be added to the mix. Let our wildlife maintain and recover their populations. Thank you, Laura Gorman, Colorado

Please do not allow trophy hunting for Grizzly Bears. These iconic animals need continued protection. Hunting will degrade the gene pool and lead to fewer and less quality animals. There is more to be gained economically by scenic viewing of grizzlies than by a small number of hunts. Please do not perpetuate bad conservation by allowing trophy hunting.

Protect grizzly bears from trophy hunting!
Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council: “No Trophy Hunting

Today there are only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

To allow this runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am a US citizen who votes. I am the child of a US Naval Commander who flew off of aircraft carriers. No one was more American than my dad, and even he would never have accepted a "trophy hunting." Dad was the kind of guy who believed that when you kill an animal, you USE all parts of the animal--after all, it sacrificed its life for your good. Those values were instilled in me.

I am opposed to any type of trophy anything. All it does is feed someone's ego, and the animal killed died for nothing. I think we can all agree that this planet belongs to all creatures. There is no one creature that is of higher rank than another. All lives are intertwined. Bears included.

Bears are also a keystone species. Arguably at the top of the food chain, it serves purposes that ensure that this world stays balanced--the same world that God gave us and made us stewards over. We don't have a Planet B to go to, so let's try to take care of the one we have, including caring for flora and fauna no matter how high up or down low you deem it to be on the food ladder.

Instead of doing God's bidding and caring for the planet, it seems all that you are interested in is destroying the planet we live on. I ask that you reconsider your actions, show empathy, and care for the planet--starting with no trophy hunts. Period. If someone wants their ego pumped, I'm certain that they can find someone to pump that ego. They don't need a bear trophy.

Trophy hunting is cruel, ignorant and a learned behavior. Enlightened human beings choose kindness to animals. Evolve and be kind to all creatures great or small.

I'm writing to say I'm STRONGLY OPPOSED to the idea of allowing trophy hunting, or any hunting, of grizzly bears....anywhere....and especially including wilderness areas in Montana. Instead, there needs to be strong efforts to help grizzlies recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana, in particular.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, it is deeply disturbing that the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. It appears the plan is to allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting is allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness will no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am wholeheartedly opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Thank you for your time and consideration of this comment.

I support the proposed grizzly bear hunting in the west. As a conservationist and outdoor recreationalist I understand that all wildlife populations must be managed. I also understand that the revenue generated by the sale of grizzly bear hunting licenses is crucial for a multitude of wildlife species. I feel that any further delay in hunter management could jeopardize populations of other wildlife as well as result in rising bear-human conflicts. As a resident of the west, and grizzly bear country, I firmly believe that grizzly populations are sustainable and ready for hunter management and funding. Thank you for your time.

I urge you to not allow trophy hunting of the grizzly bear. The Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Thanks for your consideration.

Please do not permit the hunting of Grizzlies in Montana. We need to allow the grizzly to prosper and grow, to widen its habitat and re-establish itself. It is truly the most magnificent animal on this continent. No traps, no helicopters, no mommy's boys with big guns and little penises out there 'proving' their manhood. Make a special season...hunting knives only, no guns, no back ups, just Mano to grizzly. Let's see how many of these 'men' sign up for that. I'm writing to request that you refrain from authorizing hunting of grizzly bears on our federal lands, especially federally designated Wilderness areas. Grizzly's are an important apex predator that should be forming the keystone to populations of prey animals in our ecosystems. Even though they may be inconvenient to my fellow hunters, hikers, and other outdoor folks, the population of grizzly bears should be regulated by natural forces, not human resource managers. Thanks for your consideration.

If barbaric and cruel trophy hunting is allowed in the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for them.

Grizzlies shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

These wildernesses are a key part of Montana's appeal to nature lovers and tourists. Trophy hunting will be actively destroying a huge asset of Montana and a main draw for its economy.

Shooting grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

There is no scientific, financial, or ethical justification for this. Please do not allow trophy hunting of these amazing animals that are still endangered. Thank you.

Do not allow hunting on public lands in Montana. Why? Here are just a few reasons:
1. There are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and that they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range? Less than 2%.
2. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management.
3. In the last two years there have been record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. Record-breaking grizzly bear deaths.
Conclusion: It is absolutely not okay to open up public lands to hunting grizzly bears again. Public land owners (me and my family and friends all across the country) are telling you not to allow grizzly bear hunting.
Critical Information: Grizzly bears are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit.
Summarized Comment: Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Do not allow hunting on public lands in Montana.

The Grizzly Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I many not live in Montana, but the last time I checked, Montana is on the same planet I live on!

Thanks you,

Douglas Sedon

Bob Marshall is a place like no other. It must remain as wild and untroubled by humans as much as possible. This means no grizzly hunting.

I do not believe that we should kill anything to win a trophy. All animals are gifts of God which we have at times needed to use as food. However we have seen has happened when that is not done with care and integrity.
If people want to win trophies for their ability to shoot well then let them us mechanical means as has been done for years. If they just want to have a stuffed animal or part of an animal on a wall or in their home, there are many animals that die naturally that they can use as a sign of their skill. Shooting form helicopters or in areas so crowded or other ways of being sure each will get trophy has no real meaning. Destroying an animal and not using the meat is not respecting the gifts we have been given.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am strongly opposed to allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas. It flies in the face of increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

As you are probably aware, while some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2% of their historic range.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I entirely oppose the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Please do all you can to protect grizzly bears and help them recover.

I am writing in regards to trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Hence, I vigorously oppose any hunting of grizzly bears. Considering the value of these creatures to the environment, killing them to satisfy some people's macho urges is entirely inappropriate and unwise.

The era of trophy hunting, of any species, is over. This planet needs to retain as much diversity of species as possible, and grizzly bears should be allowed to increase their numbers. Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Bears should not be hunted for trophies. Although I'm not a hunter, I don't have a problem with people hunting animals for food as long as it is an animal that isn't endangered. There is no reason for hunting bears; people don't eat them. (At least not the ones in the contiguous U.S.A.)

Grizzly bears should not be hunted. Aside from its place as an iconic species of America's wilderness, its numbers are still relatively low . Further, given their low reproductive rates combined with accidental deaths, poaching and bureaucratic management, subjecting bears to trophy hunting is neither necessary nor logical. I strongly urge the Council to let bear populations exist without human intervention.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). Grizzly bear populations have recovered to some degree over the past 40-plus years, but today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they occupy less than 2 percent of their historic range.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to ebb and flow based on habitat conditions, not based on anthropocentric rationales. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am opposed to trophy hunting in general, but especially when the animal being hunted has not yet fully recovered from near decimation.

The Grizzly Bear is an iconic animal of North America. As such, it merits ongoing strong protections. Should a time arise when its numbers are scientifically identified as too numerous, control should be made via staff of wildlife management services. This beautiful apex predator should be managed humanely and allowed to thrive . Its habitat depends on its presence as apex predator to fully function.

Grizzlies as an apex predator shape the ecosystems in which they live and smell bad and create the iconic American West that renewals the soul of the Eastern visitor to ecotourism dude ranches. I stayed in one on the Clark dedcades ago, transforming. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, with conservative science-based monitoring and rare intervention. Get those big hunters out there with a good camera to shoot the publicity shots and bow and arrow for defense, show a little courage and bring something sustainable home.

While the grizzly bear is slowly recovering after near-extermination, these iconic species remain absent from nearly 98 percent of their historic range. Grizzlies face continuing threats from climate change, dwindling key food resources, illegal poaching, lack of connectivity among populations, and the negative impacts from roads and railroad tracks fragmenting their habitat. In fact, the past two years saw record rates of grizzly bear mortality in Montana. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana will only lead to a further decline of an already fragile population.

Dear Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council,

I am writing to strongly oppose the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please do not allow any trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears in Montana.

Thank you for your thoughtful consideration,

There is no excuse for trophy hunting. Trophy hunters are arrogant sociopaths who think their own lives matter, but the lives of beings don't matter at all. It is this attitude, that nature and all living beings (except oneself and one's friends) are expendable and can be used in whatever way one wants, including being turned into a rug on the floor or a stuffed head on the wall. There are no words strong enough to describe the blindness, stupidity and cruelty of trophy hunters. It is not surprising that Trump supports trophy hunting and his sons practice it.

I am appalled by the State of Montana's consideration of trophy hunting of Grizzly bears. They are not trophies for someone's cruel sport but an intellegent animal that is vital to the eccosystem.
Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Grizzly bears already have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. Please, do not permit trophy hunting of Grizzly bears.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Good morning, just a note on your considering trophy Grizzly hunting in the great state of Montana, in wilderness areas no less. My comment would be something akin to...Are You Serious? How many more species are you willing to lower the population of so your great state can turn a few bucks. Leave them be as they are only trying to exist on a planet that is changing too fast. I have always gone by the philosophy that if you aren't gonna eat it, don't kill it.
Sincerely,
Michael Holzman

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Based upon the foregoing, I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

As someone who cares deeply about all the creatures who share our Earth, I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Thank you for considering my thoughts and acting accordingly ... and humanely.

We are adamantly opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Taking a life is NOT a sport!

I think grizzly bears are apex predators, and when you let the apex predators' population drop, it throws the whole ecosystem out of order. Keep grizzly bears protected. They are not a food source and they're not a threat to humans who don't infringe on their territory. There's no reason to hunt them.

Let nature take its course! Humans should not, and do not need to be involved in the number of bears in the wild. It is not of our concern! What we should be concerned about is how to, and need to protect these beautiful wild animals. Do not allow trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears. It is absolutely senseless! As humans, we are much more of a threat to the environment than any wild animal. We should protect and conserve, not destroy and eliminate!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

There has to be a better way of managing the grizzly bear population than allowing trophy hunters. I am sympathetic to farmers and ranchers, but there has to be a shift in this country how we think about precious wildlife. I would be happy to sit in on conversations on how to conserve them.

I met the Montana governor personally when he was in Chicago recently. He appears to be a very reasonable person who would listen and participate in this conversation.

I don't want to be a person from a city who does not understand the realities of making living in rural Montana.

Hi Guy's . . . We are standing at the edge of total global ecological collapse. The best experts believe we've lost between 70 and 80% of the world's animals. We are annihilating the natural world at a breakneck pace with more than 100,000 species being lost forever every year. All at the hand of man's insatiable appetite for death and destruction. It must stop. You have the power to make a profound difference. Grizzlies are one of the most phenomenal animals on the planet and must be protected from further carnage. Please, please take a stand on this urgent issue and do everything you can to outlaw all further killing of this iconic and majestic animal that desperately needs your help. Thank You. Xakan

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana’s Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Trophy hunting of any species is obscene and particularly so when it is an iconic top-level predator, like the grizzly bear, which is needed to maintain a healthy ecosystem.
Hunting for food or for population management is one thing, but trophy hunting exists simply to boost the ego of a single homo sapiens.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Sirs:
Please leave the bears alone. They are just starting to make a comebabk and, of course, there are uncaring people who do not care on whit for ANY animal. They, as we know, are egotistic maniacs who care nothing for any creature except themselves. So, being caring people, we should taouke care of the environment and the creatures that live there, including ourselves.

Thank You and

Have A Great One

Please do not allow Grizzly Bear trophy hunting. Grizzlies were hunted almost to extinction prior to 1975 and so much time, effort and money has been spent to protect this icon of the West. Grizzly bears represent America. We have already killed so many through hunting and loss of habitat just with human expansion into their territories that to allow someone to kill an animal just for sport is excessively cruel and unnecessary. I oppose grizzly bear trophy hunting.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

As an outdoor professional (mountain guide), I am are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Quote from Wilderness watch. I couldn't say it better.....
"Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana."

Quit pandering to the so called 'trophy hunters' and start protecting our natural environment, which includes these bears. Do the right thing; take care of our wildlife not those self indulgent hunters.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, your state is sadly considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. That means trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting is allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Please do not allow Grizzly Bear hunting! These magnificent wild animals are part of our heritage of nature and we need to protect them and their habitat for generations to come. Hunting Grizzly Bears is a hideous practice and cruel, brutal and hugely wasteful and dangerous of nature and animals we are ordained to protect. thank you for your attention and action on this.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

We as humans do enough damage to nature. Don't let the need for a trophy to stroke the ego endanger a species finally beginning to recover from the damage we have done to it previously.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I really do not understand the 'blood lust' of trophy hunters. If you are not intending to eat the meat, take a picture or leave the creature be.

Self defense is one thing, murder for fun is quite another.

I was born in Texas and raised in Oklahoma. I have been hunting since I was seven. We ate our kill.

Leave the Grizzly Bears alone!!! If public safety becomes an issue, I would revisit the issue.

Look at what the introduction of wolves did for Yellowstone Park, in just over ten years. The Yellowstone eco system was completely restored.

Do not mess with mother nature.

Just because the Trump administration lowers the standards of the ESA doesn't mean that states should. The 'Griz' is an icon of what was once a wild and dangerous American frontier. Certainly grizzly bears need some controls near populated areas and ranches (with supervision). But 'trophy' hunting is not the way to go; as a hunter I find that totally disgusting.

Please no trophy hunting of grizzly bears. I can remember hunting with my grandfather at an extremely young age. He taught me that whatever you kill you use for food. Whatever he killed was given to those that needed food, never wasted. If he were still alive I know how adamant he felt against trophy hunting. My family now is made up of meat eaters, vegetarians & vegans that are all against trophy hunting. The grizzly bears have an important role in ecology.

Setting this arbitrary limit on numbers rather than one backed by science as to what’s best for the entire ecosystem, including humans is archaic and embarrassing. Add to that that this is about trophy hunting and the whole issue reeks of a barbarism that has no place in the 21st Century. Please move with the times or eventually the times will move you.

Are there ANY grizzlies to shoot and kill anymore? Trophy hunting is what old white guys did for fun in the 1850's. That was well over a hundred years ago. There is almost nothing left to shoot, so ending sport hunting would really help get some wildlife back into nature here!

Please protect Grizzly Bears from trophy hunting which is cruel, unnecessary, and counter to being a good steward for this animal. We are called upon to be kind and balanced in our responsibilities especially when the following is already a challenge such as, "Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana." This must stop.

This is so short sighted as to be laughable. The wilderness areas need to be safe places for Grizzley, not slaughter havens for hunters. If populations have made some progress under the ESA, let them have that progress, instead of catering to the salivating trophy hunters who wish to undo that success.

Trophy hunting is archaic and not a modern "sport". Wildlife belongs to everyone; high-tech slaughter of beautiful animals is not necessary except to fulfill the ego of some. I am an NRA firearms instructor.

There should be no trophy hunting at all ...this is absurd. Very few if any hunters eat bear meat ..it is wasted. These creatures have always been a critical part of the ecosystem...humans have not. During these critical times, you must preserve these innocent creatures to live out their lives in peace. Would not you wish the same? Native American subsistence hunting should be allowed with restrictions.

Please, do not allow trophy hunting for Grizzly Bears.

While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies need all the protection they can get. They are an iconic specie and should be allowed to roam freely in their historic habitats.

Unless an animal poses a specific threat of harm to a person, there is absolutely no reason why the animal should be killed. It is senseless killing and leads to a more violent community and society. I strongly oppose allowing any hunting or trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. Instead I ask for the support of continued ESA protection and ongoing efforts for the recovery of the bear population and reoccupation of critical habitat. Montana represents the reality of the great American wilderness, and the grizzly bear is the symbol of that wilderness - and should be protected not hunted!

Thank you for the opportunity to comment:
No Trophy Hunting!
Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

WE DO NOT SURVIVE WITHOUT WILDLIFE AND HEALTHY ECOSYSTEMS!

Thank you.

While the grizzly bear is slowly recovering after near-extermination, these iconic species remain absent from nearly 98 percent of their historic range. Grizzlies face continuing threats from climate change, dwindling key food resources, illegal poaching, lack of connectivity among populations, and the negative impacts from roads and railroad tracks fragmenting their habitat. In fact, the past two years saw record rates of grizzly bear mortality in Montana. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana will only lead to a further decline of an already fragile population.

Why can we appreciate these incredible creatures that we almost obliterated from the earth. If someone really needs to see them, use a camera; not a rifle.
Our western ecosystems are threatened. The bear is a keystone species. Let the entire environment recover.

Please no trophy hunting! The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

As a lifelong hunter coming from a family of hunters, I find your proposed grizzly bear hunt appalling, disgusting and baseless!

Trophy hunting is nothing more than ego stroking for macho types trying to prove their manhood! I have known several men that only trophy hunted and they fit this bill to a "T".

I know you will state other 'reasons' for this hunt but realistically the bottom line is profit and this gives your beautiful state a blackeye.

Killing an animal to stuff it and show other people, "look what I bravely killed" shows you the real character of the person!

Montana is better than this!

Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears. These bears require such a large area for roaming and finding mates (and increasing genetic diversity by mating over a wide range) that allowing hunting and reducing their range will impact the health of the species far and wide-- including in Montana's beautiful national parks and preserves, which draw so many tourists.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.
THANK YOU FOR HELPING TO RAISE THE CONSCIOUSNESS OF HUMANITY!

Grizzlies help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not a human-determined population limit.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzlies in any capacity anywhere on public lands, including designated wilderness areas. Did you see the documentary “Trophy” yet? It is a horrific account of hunters and many non hunters who thrive in the taking of the biggest and the best animals, all for their own bragging rights. To me this is amoral, unethical and unconscionable. And to allow it on Wilderness lands is downright disgusting. We all are invested in keeping those lands as inviolable as possible....Montana is the location, but they are National treasures. Do not sully your state and the lands we all are stockholders in, with trophy hunting of a keystone species such as the American Grizzly. Thank you.

Grizzly bears only live on 2% of the land they used to. They are extinct in most of America, with no space to exist. These parcels of land are their final place to exist at all, and hunting them there is completely immoral. There are only 1,500 left. They are not like deer, which are truly everywhere and fine to hunt, they are rare gems of the wild that should be left alone!!!

I am completely against the hunting and killing of grizzlies for trophy or any other reason. Theses bears are BEINGS and a vital aspect of our biodiversity. There are so few left. We need to protect them, not murder them. Let trophy hunters use video games if they feel the need to kill something harmless.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

The Grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Do not allow the barbaric practice of trophy hunting to continue.

I am a farmer/livestock keeper and small business owner, and if you go forward with this irresponsible bear trophy hunt allowance, I will boycott all business with your state and anyone therein. I deal with bears with guardian dogs and proper food storage, and have had no losses. Hunting pinnacle predators is ecological catastrophic, unethical, and pathetic.

Please do not permit trophy hunting of grizzly bears! They play a vital part in the ecosystem of our wilderness, especially interacting with salmon to provide fertilizer and nutrition for the forests and keeping other species in balance. They are unique and magnificent. The reason that anyone would want them for a trophy is the same reason that they deserve respect and preservation. Their numbers were almost destroyed, and now they are in recovery, and they should be allowed to fluctuate naturally. Some things are so rare and precious that they should be admired and respected from a distance!

I lived adjacent to GNP for years. The only people who had negative encounters were those who brought it upon themselves be their improper behavior and actions. These powerful predators are needed - just as wolves are - for healthy ecosystems. Stop encroaching upon their territory. Leave the “urban sprawl” in states that have already squandered their treasures.
