Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

The Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana should not be allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks, would be terrible for both the populations of the bears and the ecosystems of the parks themselves, which depend on the bears as keystone species.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Please say no to grizzly bear hunting in Montana.

Seeing grizzly bears in Montana, which has happened for me a handful of times in my life, has been a real highlight. It's for encounters like that, that I've traveled often from where I live in the mid-west to visit the great parks west of the Rockies. I would be appalled if grizzly bears, whose future in the continental U.S. is far from secure, became hunting trophies. It would seriously make me consider any future travels in Montana or any other state that pursued such short-sighted policies.

Grizzlies are the canary in the coalmine regarding condition of our wildlife, forests, and wilderness areas. They should NOT be targets of hunters or " management committees" but instead should be relocated if necessary and otherwise protected. As young hikers (years ago!) we gave them a wide berth and avoided encounters successfully as Montana residents. I hateto see them as victims of shrinking habitats. Please protect them and their wild lands.

There are "tools" within Montana's state government that are promoting the notion of trophy hunting grizzly bears once they are de-listed from the ESA. Apparently to double-down on this misguided notion, trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks! This is an intellectual, moral and civil abomination.

Only about 1,500 grizzlies currently exit in the lower 48 states, populating less than 2 percent of their historic range. Despite it being wholeheartedly ignored just because it is science-based, it is nevertheless a well-established fact that grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. Record-breaking grizzly deaths have occurred in Montana over the last two years.

We can only hope that your Advisory Council will grasp reality and advise accordingly. To do otherwise would put the Advisory Council in that same group of shameful "tools" that has already embarrassed Montana nationally.

NO TROPHY HUNTING OF GRIZZLY BEARS. If such hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

As a Missoulian and kid that grew up on the Blackfoot river, my dad used to say that the only reason that a man would want to kill a Bear was #1 it was just about to kill you and #2 your penis is too small. In a world where wildlife ranges are getting smaller and smaller impacting the very survival of these species. Killing Griz for fun makes absolutely no sense at all. If these big boys go extinct it will cause shock waves right down the food chain until the elk and dear populations are impacted. This is plain and simple as dumb as going hunting for a lion, elephant or any other endangered species. Come to your senses Montana and let these amazing creatures alone.

Trophy hunting is a joke for those who obviously have a need to prove their "manhood" by killing and oft times it is with the assistance of a guide, like what happened to Cecil, the lion, some years ago. The time for humans to respect ALL animals (domestic as well as wild) is overdue and we need to admit that we humans are regressing, not advancing. Look at all the piercings, body ink, things that tribes used to do to identify their tribe(s). Humans are the enemy of our environment and all living things. This needs to be one of many WAKE UP calls!!

I understand the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. You are thinking of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

This is an idea you should throw in the trash bin.

The last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana even while they are protected under the Endangered Species Act. Many biologists express concern that this death rate is too high to maintain the genetic diversity needed to ensure the bear's future. Many biologists think the isolated Yellowstone population needs to connect with the Northern Continental Divide grizzlies to ensure genetic integrity.

The grizzly bear population today is still hovering around an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states. This is less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly low reproductive rates "mated" with record-breaking death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters , poaching,and livestock-related "control" actions means the bears need our help.

Trophy hunting is way premature. Do your job. Stand up for the long-term recovery of grizzlies in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Trophy hunting serves no purpose for the environment. It is simply an ego "game" that is destructive tot he balance of the ecosystem. I believe trophy hunting is a form of serial killing that is addictive to the participants. I think all trophy hunting should cease, and we should allow Nature to continue without human interference.

Trophy hunting is unethical and unfair to the wildlife population. Taking an animal for meat and using that animal for food is a respectable way to hunt, hunting to prove yourself capable of using human technology to kill an animal several times your size is a horrible waste of life simply to make a human feel more powerful. Bears and other animals serve a balancing purpose in their environments that keep the natural world working in a sustainable way. Natural balances are disrupted and cause sickness, and environmental deterioration when unsustainable hunting practices are allowed. Stewardship is the priority, not ego enhancement.

I'm opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears, once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA) in 1975. While some progress has been made since then to recover grizzly bear populations, there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous lower 48 states today. This means grizzlies are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range.

Grizzlies have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am totally opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing them to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I'm opposed to allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears in the state of Montana. Grizzlies have been slow to make a come-back in the lower 48. There are an estimated 1500 grizzles and they live in less than 2% of their historic range. They have very low reproductive rates and face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, coming in contact more frequently with people, poaching, livestock related "control" actions, and other types of mismanagement. Climate change has presented a challenge to grizzlies by wiping out white pine nuts --an important source of food for the great bears. Trophy hunting grizzlies deep in wilderness areas runs contrary to the whole idea of helping these animals recover. Humans have commandeered the planet forcing out so many species from their native habitats, grizzly bears included. Trophy hunting has no place in wilderness areas and I'm urging you to reject this bad idea.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
I strongly urge you NOT to allow trophy hunting grizzlies.

No, no, no, no, No. I respectfully urge you to stop (and never start) so-called trophy hunting.

When we deny animals their God-given right to move, deny their right to eat, or deny their right to be alive in the world, it is morally wrong.

I implore you to understand that our economic well-being rests upon our environmental well-being.
Outdoor recreation, and those who want to see wildlife (rather than hunt and kill or frack and exploit the environment), generates $646 billion dollars in annual spending and it creates 6.1 million jobs each year. Only a tiny slice of this comes from hunting.
Outdoor recreation provides $39.9 billion in federal tax revenue. In addition to those significant monetary benefits, the right thing to do---is to protect our precious environment and finite natural resources.

Do not allow trophy hunting solely for the money these hunts bring. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am writing in defense of Grizzly Bears. WHen I was a child, we had many different species of bears in our woods. Today, because of a loss of habitat and many inhumane activities, the population has dwindled. I think it would be a tragedy to lose more and I am requesting your help in aiding their survival.

Thank you,

Why would you allow hunting of a species that is on the endangered species list. If they become delisted, who says this will not cause them to become endangered again. Allowing trophy hunters is nothing more than a moneymaking ploy. Is everything about money. I think this is a poor judgement on your part.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Alaska does and allow the helicopter to fly over head and shoot from there. WHAT IS WRONG WITH YOUR STATE.

To The Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council: “No Trophy Hunting”

The grizzly bear is featured on Wilderness Watch’s logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While limited progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states. They are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range in the US. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana's consideration to allow trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA does not protect them. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Speak up for Grizzly Bears!
Tell the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council: “No Trophy Hunting”

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch’s logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear

I encourage no trophy hunting of any animal under your jurisdiction, in particular grizzly bears, wolves, and other critical species. Trophy hunting is an outdated and barbaric approach to wildlife management which does not take into account the need for each species to set its own path, for existing in a balanced ecosystem. Too long, wildlife has been managed by individuals with a set selfish agenda. It is time for wildlife managers to listen to the general public about how we believe ecosystems should be managed. NO Grizzly Bear trophy hunting!!!

After we (humankind) hunt, for food, profit & sport, everything on land, in the air & the sea, we'll finish with the extinction of ourselves!!!
We are so blinded by power & wealth, that the only things we see, are what I can get, right now!, for me!!!
The animals, instinctually, know how to balance their own and this planet's survival. . . . Will we learn this lesson?? I think not.

Grizzlies should not be delisted from the Endangered Species list; however, just because a species is delisted should not be taken as a mandate to kill that species for fun and profit, or really for any reason. The Earth is already screaming for us to stop destroying it, from plagues to earthquakes, global warming to mass extinctions. Clearly humans have learned nothing if they cannot understand these warnings and, in the face of them, escalate their killings of animals like grizzlies.

You are as bad as other countries killing off their wildlife for the sake of a land grab to mine or drill, displace human beings for the same purpose. Thank god for people in companies like BP's Chief Executive, Bernard Looney who has woken up to themselves and said....."This cruel pandemic is showing us much about what really matters. This crisis has helped make clear that the world in which the sole objective of a company's purpose is to maximise profit is no longer acceptable."

Since they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA) some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
No "trophy" hunting for grizzlys, period.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of these magnificent animals! Montana's wilderness should be left as "no impact, no trace" for all to enjoy.

Having traveled Montana's wilderness by foot and by raft and having seen some grizzlies with my own eyes, I wish them and their ecosystems to be left alone.

Trophy hunting of grizzly bears will be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National if they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Trophy hunting is all about ego. Hunting when a person needs food is done with respect for the animal. Trophy hunting is not necessary, respectful or keeping in touch with our fragile balance of nature. The world right now is a glaring example of how wrong things go when we pander to the ego. The bears that would be butchered have more integrity, purpose and honor than the vile humans who need a trophy to build up their flagging self worth.

I would like to see an end to all Grizzly Bear hunting. We must learn to live with wild predators, not exterminate them because they wander into human areas and avail themselves of tasty livestock. Ranchers should switch from cattle to bison. Bison is better for humans to eat and causes less damage to the Earth. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. I can't believe anyone would allow Grizzly Bear trophy hunting, or any hunting of them at all. do we really want to make it so, soon the only place we can see them alive, is in zoos, sanctuaries, etc.? the bears have it hard enough as it is(destruction of their habitat for humans to live in, camp in, etc) without letting people kill them for fun.
it's just crazy to even think about letting this happen.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I and many Montana residents are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

ive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

There is no ecological justification for continuing grizzly hunting--while there is considerable evidence that they serve as critical players in Montana's remaining wilderness ecosystems. As humans have we not learned anything with all that is going on with the pandemic, have we not learned that ALL lives matter and are precious? Why are our wildlife commodities in this century? Why as a society does trophy hunting still exist? It is unfathomable the cruelty that plagues this earth our wildlife and domesticated animals suffer the consequences at the selfishness of humanity. I hope and pray someday there will be peace and compassion for our animals as we are supposed to be their stewards and we have failed them as we are failing Mother Earth. I put this to your conscience and hope compassion wins over these horrendous trophy hunts! Someone needs to be the voice of the animals and I'm in this for the long haul.

I do not understand why trophy hunting an animal that is benefical to the ecosystem in which it lives is considered a positive. The grissly bear is currently living in 2% of the area that would have been its range. Humans just keep incroaching and that is acceptable. Hunters call it sport but have guns with sites that allow them to be beyond the eyesight of the bear, the hearing of the bear, or the smell sense of the bear. There are times that killing a bear from a helicopter or plan is called sport???? Allowing hunting on lands adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks is vile. These animals were almost extint in 1975 with the decreases in their population due to heavy handed management, poaching, and control action due to livestock issues? are used to further reduce the population. Trophy hunting is a rich man's/woman's sport which isn't a sport it's an expensive way to kill a beautiful animal that someone who wants that money to justify the killing. Humans do not have any particular right to kill but years ago it was excused because someone needed food. That is no longer the case. Stop this vile practice which could cause the extinction of another species which is not acceptable to many of us. Please do not allow trophy hunting of this beautiful animal. It is a vile and violent act.

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

The last known physical specimen of a California grizzly was shot and killed in Fresno County in 1922. Two years later, the last wild California grizzly was spotted several times in Sequoia National Park and then never seen again. Civilized man had made California's official animal officially extinct by 1924.
Since 1980, there have been only two (0.1/year) grizzly bear-caused human injuries in developed areas, an average of approximately one every 20 years. Over the same time span, there have been 34 human injuries caused by grizzly bears in the backcountry: an average of one per year.

I am opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears on public lands and within America's National Wilderness Preservation System. It has taken 40 tears to rebuild the population to a meager 1500. Why would you consider destroying this success? They are a critical species that help maintain a healthy ecosystem where they live and roam.

I am utterly opposed to allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. While the federal government has gutted the Endangered Species Act (ESA), it doesn't mean that included species are no longer endangered. Why push one more majestic species to the brink of extinction, for hunting revenues, when protections for that species could generate greater tourist revenues? Allowing trophy hunting would be cruel, irrational and counter-productive.

To the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please protect grizzly bears and their habitat! Thank you!

I am not gong to be scientific here but only ethical because I have no scientific background but I do have morals.Grizzlies do not exist for to boost the egos of hunters, satisfy their desire to kill wildlife, or provide room decor. They are instead living and feeling beings who. unlike use, have roles in nature plus the fact that it is just wrong to kill just because one cane. One or two people are killed and it is considered a tragedy yet people have no problem killing bears or other wildlife for the pure pleasure of it. Sure, some may be killed for food but most will not and there will be no discrimination between mothers ad those without cubs leaving them as orphans. i can not say that I even expect you to heed what i say because of the completely different views we have about wildlife and how we as people see ourselves in ranking. The fact is that humans are not special or the most or only important species but merely the one with the power-power that is too often abused. In truth it is our own species that is the dangerous one with its sense of entitlement and human centricity. I would like to think you would think about this but sadly have no expectations of that. Still I needed to express my extreme sadness and anger about this proposed decision.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Killing to survive is Nature's way for many, but trophy hunting is not necessary for survival - it's all vanity, and it deprives animals of their lives and leads to their suffering for no valid purpose. Animals have as much right to live their lives as do humans. Killing for "sport" or for trophies is cruel and inhumane.

We can't afford to lose more diversity in our wildlife. Scientists have been warning us of the dangers that come from the imbalance we create in our natural environment. These are majestic animals to be "enjoyed" alive in a natural setting, not as a trophy on someone's wall. Some many of us consider ourselves lucky to have such creatures roaming in our parks and wilderness areas. Live and let live!

Please do not allow grizzly bear hunting to resume. Grizzly bears were nearly driven to extinction. If trophy hunting is allowed to resume once they're de-listed from the Endangered Species Act, they will not continue their recovery. As it is, the last two years have seen all time record deaths of grizzly bears due to automobiles, trains, livestock ranchers, and hunters who claim they killed bears in self defense.
Grizzly bears reproduce at very slow rates. It is imperative that grizzly bears be allowed to recover and to reoccupy their critical habitat. They must be safe on the public lands they currently occupy, including in the wild lands within our National Wilderness Preservation System, and the wild public lands adjacent to Glacier National Park and Yellowstone Park.
I strongly urge you not to allow any grizzly bear trophy hunting to resume.
Thank you.

Grizzly bears are still protected under the ESA and to possibly allow trophy hunting after the bears are taken off is contrary to allowing them to survive naturally in the wildlife. They help shape ecosystems and should be allowed to survive naturally with natural ups and downs. So go the Grizzlies, so goes the environment. Unnatural trophy hunting can affect the natural ecosystem so for these reasons, I am opposed to trophy hunting. Let nature decide for herself and not humans. Nature has done well for herself. We , on the other hand, have interfered and detrimentally hurt the environment in the process.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Grizzlies are not only iconic to these areas, but also an important part of their unique ecosystems.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears within wilderness areas, runs contrary to allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I urge you not to permit trophy hunting of the grizzly bear. The Great Bear is still in recovery. I am writing to ask you to prohibit trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears. As a keystone species that was pushed to the edge of extinction (and listed under the Endangered Species Act), the recovery of the bears is underway but not sufficient to allow the pressure that trophy hunting would cause. As a former game warden, I support responsible hunting. However, trophy hunting of grizzlies is not the way to go. The abuses I've seen in the past make me very wary that trophy hunting could be responsibly managed and that widespread poaching won't occur under the guise of trophy hunting. Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzlies.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Thank you,
Brian Pierce

Hunting anything to extinction is foolish. Top predators are important in keeping the ecology running smoothly. Look at what happened when more wolves were introduced into Yellowstone Park.

I am writing as an occasional visitor to Montana. I have hiked (backpacked) over the Beartooth Plateau three times and it's one of my favorite places in the world. I am also a mammal ecologist and know something about the role of mammalian predators in ecosystems. Grizzlies are worth more alive than dead. Their ecosystem services are substantial and those benefits extend far and wide. Trophy hunting serves the few and deprives the rest of us of broader ecosystem benefits. Please oppose any further trophy hunting in Montana wildernesses, which are legendary in terms of their natural beauty and wildlife.

Please, do not permit trophy hunting of grizzly bears in the great state of Montana. The reproductive rates for grizzlies is low. Grizzlies already suffer a high enough death rate (by cars, trains, poaching, etc.) without hunting being allowed. The last two years have seen significant grizzly mortalities in Montana. Bears and Wildlife need to be protected in this country. They need to be protected everywhere. We only have one Earth. The living beings on this planet deserve to live. I think everyone is forgetting about the importance of wildlife being protected because we're all consumed with this virus. The same way that the virus attacks the system, and kills you; is the same way that human beings have been killing off wildlife. Those Bears have a right to live in peace. Leave them alone! Keep Hunters the hell away from them. There is no need in this country for hunting ever. We have plenty of food. Even during these times we have food. It's wrong and it's disgusting.

The hunters can live without a bear rug in their living room or on the wall of their den, but the bears can't persist without a place to be. Also, hunting guides can likely make more money with photographers than hunters. Thanks.

To be honest, I don't know enough about the pros and cons of this hunting issue. I can say that when I was a little kid I saw many of these enormous bears in Yellowstone Park. To me they and Bison represent the animal history of this Country. Bison were almost wiped out by killing them for either sport or their tongues. Pretty barbaric and stupid. I hope Grizzlies don't fall into this same category of barbaric and stupid.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzly Habitat is shrinking, the climate is heating, and water resources are being confiscated in Montana. All of this is negatively impacting the Grizzly population throughout the Rockies and especially in Montana. It's time to stop harassing the population in Montana with trophy hunting pressures. Put the Grizzle first and protect our heritage.

I find it abhorrent that as a society we even have to discuss the killing of an animal for the sake of someone's ego. Trophy hunting of animals is shameful. There are few enough places for the wildlife to live their lives in peace as they have every right to do. Allowing hunting to take place on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks is tragedy waiting to happen. Please do not allow the hunting of Grizzly Bears should they lose their Endangered Species Act protections.

Any person who considers murdering grizzly bears for the fun of it, rather than to let it live free and continue to thrive, is beyond sadistic and mentally ill.
Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Are you serious? There are fewer grizzlies in the entire world than in a small town in Montana. Come on, let them live! They deserve a place to live. What good does it do for life to have a man shoot a bear and put its head on his wall? Why is this even an issue? Your state is a sanctuary for wildlife and you don't even value it!

In this time of crisis, please leave our animals, Wild & domestic, alone. People are dying and those that need to kill things to satisfy their personal sickness for recognition will be much happier if they and their loved ones do something positive for the world. Animals are here because they are needed and they are not needed to appease someones desire to kill something.

Animals are not ours to exploit. The life of a bear is no different than the life of a dog, or a cat, or any other animal that is kept as a pet. Hunting, especially for sport, is barbaric.

There is absolutely no need to "hunt" grizzlies. "Hunting" grizzlies only serve to feed men's fragile egos, and we certainly don't need to pander to those weaknesses under the guise of "hunting" grizzlies. They are already having a hard enough time with loss of habitat, poisoning, baiting, and climate change. Please say no to this nonsense for the good of the planet and all of its creatures.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Thanks for considering my comments.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I repeat - I am ENTIRELY OPPOSED to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Our public lands are supposed to be a protected area for wildlife and preserved for future generations and species that used to freely roam our country. They are not for the 'privileged' few who want to boast about killing one of the great American iconic species. It is wrong to allow trophy hunting in wilderness areas and threatens more than the future of the grizzly bear.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Enough! Leave the bears the space they need and let them live. Grizzly hunts seem to be confined to jerks like Don Jr., and other dispicable folks people find appalling. I think there might be a good reason for that.

Hello: Please ban hunting trophies from Grizzley Bears. Aside from the fact that's it's intrinsically cruel to hunt an animal for sport, as opposed to hunting for meat, "Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live."

Thank you for your time spent reading m plea to you.

I live in Southwestern Colorado, and have been a hunter since I was seven years old. I am now 74 years old so I have no quarrel with hunting per se. I have great indignation for trophy hunting however. To kill any animal to appease someone’s ego is an archaic and sick behavior. The discussed a feel for trophy hunting is upped 10 times when the animal killed is an endangered specie like the grizzly bear. I say to the state of Montana grow up, and have some personal accountability.

This hunting of bears is absurd, grotesque and barbaric.
Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Please ban Grizzly Bear trophy hunting. If trophy hunting is allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers must be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not a human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please ban Grizzly Bear trophy hunting.

Sincerely,
Louise Simone

Montana should never allow killing of the Grizzly Bear by trophy hunters. The bear has never recovered from human killing that nearly made it go extinct. Trophy hunters are egotistical creeps with no regard for life or nature.

I own 3 guns & have a Concealed Weapon permit.
Yet, to allow people to kill a grizzly bear just because they can, just because the gun makes them all powerful -- is just another form of bullying. I'm don't hunt but, at my age of 83, if I (or my friends or family) were starving, I would have no qualms about killing an animal -- for food! Trophy hunting is, simply put, another form of bullying. Please, do NOT allow trophy hunting of the grizzly bear!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now, I am raising your voice for grizzly bears to tell you that I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Thank you for your time.

What kind of humans are we who would trash a bear's life for some stupid trophy to hang on a wall so a bunch of low-life, low-brow individuals can brag or whatever they do. As a species, humans have a long way to go in our evolution, if we are still considering such proposals as this.

My family and I see it as great good fortune that these magnificent, formidable animals were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act in 1975. Yes, some progress has been made since then but grizzly bear populations today are still stuck at about 1,500 animals in the lower 48 states and within only 3% of their historic range.

I am writing to express strong opposition to a proposal to allow hunting of grizzly bears once they are delisted under the Endangered Species Act. I worked a summer in Yellowstone and camped and backpacked every weekend, so I'm familiar with dealing with grizzly bears. These animals are key to the ecosystems in which they occur and they should be allowed to continue to recover their populations. This is especially true in designated wilderness areas, where human intervention is supposed to be minimized.

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 45 years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. My better half and I are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. They are wild animals which do not belong on someone's wall or floor.
Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival and the health of their ecosystems.

It doesn't hurt the tourist trade, either, and we are otherwise inclined to think very well of Montana, its people, its National Parks, its Wilderness, and its food - and it is currently our #1 destination for our next vacation.

We would certainly appreciate it if you do the right thing, and of course, we will be that much more inclined to visit your beautiful and welcoming state again.

We appreciate your effort and consideration, and hope to hear from you soon.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. They should not be hunted! Don't give in to hunters!

I am opposed to allowing prize hunting of grizzlies in Montana and in designated Wilderness areas. There need to be wild areas where animals can live and proliferate without much human intervention. That would be what I consider wilderness!

Please protect grizzlies in Montana. Trophy hunting of this barely recovering, iconic bear would only add to the many threats grizzlies already face because of humans. They've only recovered in 2% of their original habitat. Montana's wilderness areas need stable, viable grizzly populations to sustain nature's balance.

I understand hunting for food to feed your family and not wasting anything. Trophy hunting is not that ,it is a slaughter of a top predator whose presence is needed to benefit the ecosystem, not so some idiot can cut off its head to decorate the den. You will make more with tourism wanting to see these magnificent bears alive than you will get from trophy licenses.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears aren't 'trophies'... they are apex predators who help keep the wildnerness clean. They've been pushed to the brink of extinction before and we don't need to do that again. Leave the animals alone. I don't care about some hunter that doesn't give a damn about this animal; their egos are the problem. Shooting a grizzly bear with a high powered rifle isn't something to brag about; beat him in hand to hand combat and you deserve a 'trophy'. Hunting is NOT a "level playing field".

To the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

We are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Help us protect grizzly bears and Wilderness in Montana and around the country.

What do you do with our dead Grizzley? Do you feel a sense of strength and power? Do you have any real friends? We need to protect the apex predators - bears along with big cats, wolves, etc. They keep the balance in nature. We need to live side by side and we need to respect our earth and all its creatures. We are the ones encroaching on their territory. Not the other way around. Every time we loose a species of animal for ever, we loose a part of ourselves. We where put on this earth to protect all God's creatures not hunt them down for trophies, etc.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act. While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. I would strongly urge you to not allow "trophy hunting" of grizzly bears. Firstly, I highly doubt that they have recovered to the level that would allow this activity and secondly, this term is merely a cover for hunting by elitists who have little to no interest in the long-term welfare of these animals. Thank you.

Trophy hunting of grizzlies is absurd - ongoing climate change will dramatically change ecosystems and resilience approaches to adaptations should be promoted which does not include removing apex predators.

I am opposed to allowing the trophy hunting of grizzly bears. God did not give us animals to trophy hunt. God entrusted us, as we are in his likeness, to protect and preserve the earth he created. Grizzly bears like so many other species, have been hunted almost to extinction. Due to the Endangered Species act some animals are beginning to make a comeback. While some progress has been made, grizzly bear population only numbers 1500. In the last two years there have been record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. Please do not allow trophy hunting for grizzly bears because Donald Trump Jr. wants to shoot and kill a bear. That's the way I see it. As I said, God gave us the responsibility to care for and protect our Earth and not to do Donald Trump's bidding.

Please do not allow trophy hunting on the grizzly bears in your state! Most people never even have the opportunity to see a grizzly bear in the wild and this would only decimate their population further. Also trophy hunting is a barbaric sport – we should learn to live with animals and respect them as their lives are just as precious as ours. However I do understand if people want to hunt and actually eat the animal that they have shot but trophy hunting is such a waste of an animal‘s life.

Please do not allow killing of these majestic creatures they are beautiful. I do understand they can be dangerous but so can humans. I dislike hearing about people that go and kill bears why they're in hibernation and killing their babies . I also despise Sportsman Hunters I will never understand it and I will never like it. I was raised that if I was just shooting animal I was just shoot it with a camera that would have preserved its existence for that specific animal. I love animals they're beautiful creatures and have all rights just like we do to be on this Earth and not be hunted. I really wish people before they would go and kill these animals or abuse the animals would look at the prospect of what would it be like if roles were reversed and we were the ones out to be hunted or abused. I mean the greatest example that I can give is look at what we've done to the different species of wolves some are endangered some we're totally extinct due to our hands. We have to leave this beauty alone for our future children to be able to enjoy and respect. And a show that we cared enough for them to show them the beauty for them to see with their own eyes not just hear about. So please hear my plea we need to protect these beautiful creatures no matter how big how small we must love them as if they were our children because they are God's children he doesn't have just two legged he has four legged children as well. Thank you for your time.

Though the Endangered Species Act has meant that grizzly bears are not extinct from the lower 48 states, their population remains fragile. Add to their fragile population the fact that grizzly reproduction rates are challenged by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management, trophy hunting could quickly and easily put them into being critically endangered if not extinction all together. That is why I am asking that you not open up the state of Montana to grizzly bear trophy hunting.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
Above all, killing Creation is just evil if for any reason other than out of desperation for survival.

Hello. I am totally opposed to allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, especially within wilderness areas. This runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing Grizzlies to recover in number and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Trophy hunting brings a kind of hunter who is not interested in the ecology of a region, or who pays attention to sustaining bear families and protecting longevity of young bears. Bears should be allowed to thrive and survive in the wilderness. Bear heads- or paws, or claws - should not be treated like a "trophy" and given away. "Trophy hunters" are not about the animals and their inherent beauty as living creatures. They are all about the trophy. I am totally opposed, and ask you to think about maintaining protection of wildlife, and not their slaughter.

I oppose any trophy hunting of grizzly bears, particularly in designated wilderness areas that were set aside specifically to be safe havens for wildlife. In this time of Coronavirus, a zoonotic illness, we should be even more mindful of the necessity of preserving wildlife habitat, as loss of wildlife habitat./biodiversity & resultant increasing human/wildlife interactions have long been pointed out by science as a key factor in increasing zoonotic illness. There is no reason to encourage trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Tourism to view the bears, not kill them, will bring in far more people & economic benefits to the state of Montana.

To Whom It May Concern:

As you know, grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states. It was wonderful when in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am completely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Please do not move forward with this terrible action. We owe it to future generations to keep the Grizzly Bears in our country.

Thank you.

Please do not allow trophy hunting on the grizzly bears in your state! Most people never even have the opportunity to see a grizzly bear in the wild and this would only decimate their population further. Also trophy hunting is a barbaric sport – we should learn to live with animals and respect them as their lives are just as precious as ours. However I do understand if people want to hunt and actually eat the animal that they have shot but trophy hunting is such a waste of an animal‘s life.

I agree with the statement below, issued by Wilderness Watch:

"If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live."

I strongly urge you to protect our Grizzly Bears and the environment that they thrive in.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana and ESPECIALLY not in wilderness areas. Grizzly bears are native to Montana and are a natural part of the ecosystem. The ecosystem is much better balanced when grizzly bears are present. They were an endangered species until recently. Thank goodness they are recovering. If trophy hunting is allowed, this will be a set back for their full recovery. Thank you for listening to my comment.

As a former property owner in Livingston and a regular visitor to the state, there is absolutely no reason to risk the extermination of these great bears for no purpose. Please do not allow hunting of these bears. Thank you for considering my opinion.

Let’s not sugar coat it, lets call it what it is. Murder

I am opposed to the trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Gizzly Bear's should not be hunted because bears clean up carcasses, and help keep moose and deer populations in check. They are also an important draw for tourists who come see them. Bears do not have a large litter and mature slowly, so it takes time to replace a bear that is killed.

Thanks for the opportunity to comment.

My husband and I - hopefully - will be staying in Cooke City in early June because the northeast entrance to Yellowstone better accesses the animal areas of the Park. I do not like the fact that hunting wolves or bears or any other Park animal is allowed: Yellowstone is, I feel, a sanctuary for animals, not for hunters or snowmobiles.

I oppose this grotesque show of manhood, to use a high powered gun to shoot such a beautiful animal to put on a wall is immoral, unethical and wrong. Insisting on using torture and the murder of sentient beings that never did harm to us as fuel for masculinity is gross. Many more people would love to see a wild live Grizzly Bear than a dead one.

These animals are under enormous stress as it is, and they are entitled to live a quality life, not be entertainment for someone who gets enjoyment by causing them pain & death. This is worse than disgusting & I hope somehow you put the welfare of these bears above pressure from trophy hunters.

I am dismayed to learn that the Council is considering allowing hunting of grizzly bears as trophies. These bears are a great symbol of wilderness and wildness in the American West. Simply hunting them so someone can put a taxidermied bear over their fireplace or as a rug is disrespectful to this majestic creature. I certainly hope you will reconsider this management option. Mankind will kill every living thing on Earth for greed. Look at the stuff we put into food to grow it faster for money. Why are there more people getting cancer, the crap food we eat. Trophy hunting is a horrible idea. Eventually children will only hear about the animals of today and never get to see one because mankind likes to hide in a tree and shoot a living being. There is no sport in that and anyone that believes they are hunter doing that should be ashamed. Man has become the cancer and is a disgrace.

I oppose any plan for trophy hunting Grizzlies. As stewards of the Earth, we must protect our environment and the health and safety of ALL who live here, including Grizzlies (Ursus arctos horribilis).

Grizzlies are keystone species essential to shaping the ecosystems in which they live. Where grizzlies thrive, so will their habitat. Hunting Grizzlies for sport serves only hubris.

Unfortunately, most grizzlies die in their first few years of life from predation or hunting. Human encroachment on grizzly habitat and excessive overhunting by humans have greatly harmed their healthy existence and survival. Grizzlies once roamed throughout the entire western United States south into Mexico, including the Great Plains and along rivers in desert habitats. Control actions and habitat loss extirpated them from 98 percent of their original habitat in the U.S.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, especially deep within Wilderness areas, is cruel and antithetical to their successful role in conservation of habitat and ecosystem.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, your state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly Bears are a critical amazing species that still have a very small population. They should not be hunted! And especially not anywhere near Yellowstone!

Trophy hunting is nothing more than an ego-builder for certain people. If we were the hunted, we would want an end put to this barbaric ritual. Have them take up skeet shooting instead.

Trophy hunting is wrong! Even if grizzlies weren't an endangered species, I don't think such a cruel game should be permitted.

Hello,
I have grave concerns about the possible proposed trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

I lived in beautiful Flathead Valley and the Mission Valley of NW Montana for 28 years and only left due to family necessity and the need to assist in the care of my aging mother. I have followed the ups and downs of grizzly bears for much of my life and fought for their protection.

The entire idea of allowing hunting of grizzly bears is abhorrent and extremely short sighted at best and such hunting should never be allowed! IF you analyze the true facts concerning variations in the population and needs of the grizzly, in order to fully protect their numbers and continue to assure they are maintained and continue to expand, NO HUNTING OF GRIZZLY BEARS SHOULD BE ALLOWED!!! Grizzly deaths in the last 2 years are at all time highs and with all due respect, to allow ANY hunting of the grizzly is absurd and INSANE!! PLEASE DO NOT ALLOW ANY HUNTING OF THIS ICONIC SPECIES, COMPLETELY PROTECT THEM NO MATTER WHAT!!!
THANK YOU!!
K YOUNG

Predators are an essential part of the eco-system. Trophy-hunting and killing contests are no longer acceptable approaches for managing the environment. Indeed they seem rather grotesque remnants of a very outdated mind-set. Please move forward with a more appropriate approach and disallow trophy hunting of predators, or any kind of hunting that involves so-called "contests". With the modern hunting equipment available there is no longer skill involved in this kind of "contest". They are merely slaughter, and entirely unacceptable as approaches to wildlife "management".

Thank you. Carlis Nixon
