Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. Please protect them.

The Advisory Council must consider the long-term health of the Grizzly Bear population. At present, poaching, vehicle and “livestock protection” deaths keep grizzly bears from significantly growing their population. Their population is barely sustainable as is. Legalizing trophy hunting would quickly drive the number back down to the Endangered level, requiring another cessation of hunting and once again disrupting the ecosystem by the bears’ absence. In simple terms, without a sustainable management plan, you would (very quickly) destroy the thing you want.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I know how often the stockmen's organizations have influenced the issue of endangered species in your state.Rebounding numbers of bears is not an opportunity for open season bear hunting when bears are reestablishing a foothold in their natural environment. I urge you to reject all attempts to have an open season bear hunt in Montana until such time as there is a verified ample and harvestable surplus in the grizzly bear population.

As a mother and grandmother, I believe it is our duty to protect and preserve wildlife as precious natural resources for all future generations. And as a person of faith, I feel a deep responsibility for all of God's Divine Creation.

So I strongly oppose allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including in Wilderness areas, conflicts with the goal of increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.
Please do not allow this travesty to happen. Do not steal these animals from our children's future just for the entertainment of a few selfish, shortsighted, irresponsible and destructive individuals.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. I am opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Thank you for your consideration.

I am opposed to the trophy hunt of grizzly bears. While the species may be deemed "recovered", given all the challenges this species faces, from climate to automobile impacts, that recovery is far from assured. This strikes me as a ploy to advantage some special interests over the long term health of the species, which is of little surprise in this day of age of myopic entitlement.

In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

The grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, therefore any consideration of allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies is premature, as there will be a fight to keep them from being de-listed from the ESA. Under some proposals trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Please allow Grizzlies to live in their territories without the additional threat of being hunted. We still have so much to learn from all creatures and there is no point to the killing.

Trophy hunting of any wild animal is a barbaric practice that unbalanced people use to demonstrate pride in killing and dominance with a high-powered weapon. The antithesis of appreciating and coexisting with the natural world. Trophy-hunting of majestic grizzly bears or any other wild animal should be abolished and made a federal crime.

There should be no trophy hunting of grizzly bears. They are struggling to adapt to climate change and there are not too many for their territories. Please stop listening to stupid hunters and instead, listen to scientists and biologists. Hunters will always act in their own interest while scientists and biologists will look at the facts. Thank you for considering my comments.

After years of hard work and regulation, the grizzly bears are finally making a comeback. To allow hunting after so much time and money has been invested seems somewhat ludicrous. These bears deserve every chance to live in their native habitat without fear of being baited and shot...and for what? So someone can have a mounted head or a bearskin rug. Please do not allow hunting of the grizzly bears which have suffered too much already at the hands of man (the supposedly more intelligent and superior animal).

In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.
I think hunting & killing any animal for sport is disgusting and needs to be stopped immediately.

As you know, there are an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not a human-conceived population limit; further, any preceived necessary population management should reflect the science of wild place sustainability vs a consumer mentality for trophies. Ironically, where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Please say no to greedy and meaningless trophy hunting of these vital creatures.

In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I have a lot of respect for Montanans. Four Generations of my family live there. As someone who spends a lot of time out in nature and in our national parks I enjoy the solitude and beauty and respect that is given to our wildlife and wild spaces. Lately as I visit I am very aware of many intrusive changes such as the affects of climate change, greedy corporation, and trophy hunting grizzly bears. I implore you to protect our grizzly bears and their habitat. Let’s keep moving forward and not backward in protecting not only our rich, unique heritage but the protection of our great grizzlies. But the way a grandson on mine is a great taxidermist and considers it unethical to trophy hunt these bears. Thank you

When I read about these inhumane practices, I just shudder. Are you folks still living in dark ages?? I lived in AK for over a decade & had proper respect and reverence for Grizzlies. They are extraordinary animals & icons of life in the West. It is our responsibility to safeguard our Grizzly populations. They have a tough enough life keeping themselves & their cubs alive, with fire seasons , loss of habitat due to development, noise pollution, drastically reduced salmon runs,etc. Do they really also need to deal with a bunch of gun-loving, macho "hunters"??? This kind of hunting is to real Hunting (like people in AK do to feed their families) as golf is to Sport. Shame on you folks up there!!!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears indiscriminately, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Please, do not allow this to happen. Thank you for your time.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

There remain an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the lower 48 states and they hang-on in less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting's allowed in Montana, the beautiful Wilderness areas of Montana like the Cabinet Mountains, Bob Marshall, Absaroka-Beartooth, Great Bear, Scapegoat, and Lee Metcalf Wilderness will no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

We're opposed to opening trophy hunting of grizzly.

Hunting deep within Wilderness areas is COUNTERPRODUCTIVE to the goal of letting the Great Bear recover and reoccupy their threatened last bits of critical habitat essential for their survival.

DO NOT ALLOW MORE KILLING OF GRIZZLY BEAR.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of the American wilderness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the US. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Grizzly.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am 100% opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. I completely oppose this barbaric attempt to destroy this unique bear - a true symbol of what is wild and great about America.

Most trophy hunters don't eat their kill. If there are Native Americans and others willing to eat the bear they hunt and there are an excess of bears in the USA, then I would feel differently. However, excess bears in Montana should be sent to Utah and other states that once had bears and do not have many or any now. (There are programs to recompense ranchers losses so that isn't a big issue.)

I believe grizzly bears are very much at risk with our warming climate. This is no time to threaten them more with the waste of trophy hunting. Please, let us resolve to protect that highly constrained wildlife that remains, and work hard to see them have a more viable future. This is the time, above all, to preserve and protect what remains, not exploit. I hope my 7 grandchildren can live in a world of vibrant experiences of wildlife, but that will be quite unlikely if we do not strengthen our commitment for preservation. Please study the ways grizzlies are being pressured, such as with the diminishment of whitebark pines in grizzly habitat. Please, emphasis science with a governing priority to preserve.

How horrible to have a pandemic while the government quietly considers or allows polluting and destruction of public lands--isn't that OUR public land, and shouldn't WE have the final say in this?

Let nature do the job and let man who is inherently destructive find something that would add leverage and sustainability to the Earth without compromising it.

If you were to allow truly fair "trophy" hunting to take place in Montana, I must confess that I would be one of the first people to arrange my travel plans so that I could be a spectator. Of course, by FAIR, I mean that the trophy hunters would hunt the bears with the exact same provisions, accessories, etc. that the bears themselves use for hunting. In other words, the hunters would have to go out with no food and no weapons. What exactly makes the bear a "trophy" unless it is killed in any other fashion? You cannot consider it to be an honorable, noble, respectable accomplishment to kill an animal that is just barely creeping over the edge of extinction for the sole purpose of inflating the egos of "trophy hunters." I cannot imagine that such grossly ignorant ideas would even be considered by those who have been placed in positions of power and — more importantly — public trust such as yourselves. Officials that will be making such significant and far-reaching decisions are elected by constituents who trust that they will make such decisions based upon facts and scientific evidence. They do not expect decisions to be made according to which options will be more financially or personally advantageous for those involved. I like to think that none of this applies to you, and that you will make your decisions to the benefit of the planet and the species that inhabited it long before man. Only time will tell if the greatest trophies that our species will be able to claim will be those of complete destruction.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I oppose the trophy hunting of grizzy bears. In an era where habitat destruction, global warning and exploitation of the natural world have threated the long term ecological health of many large species including Grizzy Bears, the last thing we need to do is allow them to be hunted merely to give bragging rights to people whose only model of how to interact with nature is to periodically go in and kill something.

We have seen progress in the health of the grizzly bear population thanks to its protection under the ESA. But if it were to be de-listed, it is very important that we not take that as carte blanche to begin decimating their numbers again. Trophy hunting in particular is a completely vain, useless human failing that deserves no special consideration, no matter how one may feel about other forms of hunting. Stand up for those that can't stand up for themselves. Life is all about balance whether we like it or not. Creating an imbalance in nature will catch up to you eventually. And not in a positive way. Until we have an overabundance of grizzlies in every one of their natural habitats, hunting should not even be considered. Think globally and think for a better future rather than one with special interests continuing to dominate a healthy planet and therefore a healthy population. Thank you.

There is nothing to be gained by killing Grizzly bears. If they need to shoot something, put up paper or wood targets for them and get them some professional help.

This summer, my husband and I plan to take a long driving tour through the western US- virus permitting. We planned to visit Montana. However, your state will be OFF OUR LIST if you de-list the grizzly bear from the Endangered Species Act and allow trophy hunting. I just am not interested in supporting a state or its tourist business if you allow something so counter to us folks who just want to see nature that is ALIVE, and we have money to spend, if that is important to your state's businesses. I would hope that someone in your state with some view of the future will not allow this to happen.

I am totally opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears-- and not just because I would like to come see them in the wild. They need a chance to recover. Let our hunters shoot paper targets!

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Dear members of the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council,
I am writing to you as a concerned citizen and a frequent visitor to Montana's wilderness areas and National Parks. I am asking you to ban and oppose any proposed hunting of grizzly bears in any public land, including national parks, wilderness areas, wildlife preserves, state parks and recreation areas.

Please consider these points before making your decisions:
The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related control actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters - or any hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

One of the reasons my family, friends and I enjoy traveling, hiking and camping in Montana's back-country is having the opportunity to view the large amount of native wildlife - including being lucky enough to see a grizzly bear (from a safe distance of course!). I have seen what the loss of keystone species such as grizzly bears, wolves and mountain lions do to unnaturally increase the populations of elk and deer in places like Rocky Mountain National Park Colorado. As much as we love seeing the elk there, it makes us sad to see the damage from having too many and what they are doing to endanger the aspens and other native plants.

Please do your part to help the beautiful and necessary grizzly bear increase their numbers and re-balance the natural ecology of Montana's wilderness.

Thank you,
Beth Cohen

I am begging you to please leave these poor animals alone. There’s enough deaths going on right now, and we don’t need to continue to kill. Leave these animals be, let them live their lives just like you wanna live yours. It makes no sense to me why a human being feels as though that it’s OK to take a gun and shoot an animal. What gives you the right to do that.? What gives you the right to decide what lives in dies? You need to stop off and be leaders that have a heart that want to preserve life, life of animals that deserve to be there as much as anybody else. It’s shameful but I even have to write a comment. This should be common sense that you just don’t go killing. It’s really that easy. Stop killing! Again, it’s really that easy, stop killing!

The Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

The grizzly bear is currently protected by the ESA, but the state of Montana is already considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the threatened Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Dear Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council,

I live in Gardiner and my family and I are totally opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. We don't want our Yellowstone Grizzlies numbers messed with!

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear and we would lose many precious bears and all that they bring to these ecosystem and our wilderness. So it isn't just the Yellowstone Grizzlies who we are concerned about.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please do not open up trophy hunting of Grizzlies and thank you for your thoughtful attention to our comments.

Sincerely, The Stewart Family

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Trophy hunting of grizzly bears should never be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. These lands were protected to keep these Endangered Bears and other wildlife safe.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Please do not do this. Trophy hunters are a very minor subset of the population of Americans, as a US Citizen and owner of that public land, I do not want this to happen. Please keep them safe.

I am unalterably opposed to trophy hunting of grizzly bears or any other wild species. I am opposed because grizzly bears are incredible animals and a key part of the ecosystems to which they belong. I am also opposed for ethical reasons. I find the senseless, ego driven taking of the lives of other beings in order to be ale to brag about killing them and mount them on the wall or turn their skin into a rug to be profoundly unethical. Humans do not have the right to take the lives of other animals in this way. As a vegan, I personally do not accept the killing of any animal for food, but trophy hunting is much, much worse than hunting in order to put food on the table. It is depriving another being of his or her life simply for the pleasure of killing and then bragging about it and should be banned everywhere. It is also a part of the total disregard for the lives of other beings that is driving the extinction crisis. Please ban grizzly bear hunting now and forever. It is pointless, cowardly and horrifically cruel.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Trophy hunting the symbols of wilderness... OUTRAGEOUS!
I am absolutely appalled at how this nation can allow the extermination of these majestic creatures that symbolize the foundations of this great country - what's next: shooting bald eagles for sport? Shame on America!
Oppose trophy hunting grizzlies and the whims of a few to kill our wildlife for egotistical showoff sport - stand up for our nation and protect it now, before it's too late!

So many if us are committed to living at peace in our natural environment. Animal life has many things to teach us as people. Trophy hunting is obscene and I am opposed to such hunting of grizzly bears on every level. It is unnecessary. It intrudes on the natural order of things, upsetting balances in nature. We must find ways to live in harmony with all living things and allow wild things their lives. Please do not approve hunting of these majestic animals.

Please do not allow grizzly bear hunting. Grizzly bears are still endangered. To allow hunting will only hurt grizzly populations, which have been very slow to recover despite Endangered Species Act protections currently in place. We need bears to help restore natural balance to the ecosystems they inhabit.

Q3

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Dear Grizzly Bear Advisory Council Members,

The Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Protect grizzly bears!

Sincerely,
Georgeanne Matranga

Where's the thrill in killing Wildlife that isn't coming after You and isn't used for food? I don't get it. I can only think these Great Big Hunters are really Cowards at heart - chicken, in fact! 21st Century and what have we learned. Not much! We allow our species to move into adjacent Wildlife areas and then call for the extermination of Wildlife, like Wolves, who've ventured in. It's WILD life; they don't have subdivisions and neighborhoods, but we, the REAL predators Do. We haven't learned a damn thing!

Their population are still not large enough for a healthy sustainable gene pool. It is a travesty to allow any hunting of these bears but especially for trophy hunters. These bear must have continued protection until their numbers and geographic distribution range are up to "pre -white settlers" and the pre-settler population levels.

I do not think grizzlies should be hunted at all. They are a key species in North American ecosystems and we need to learn to live with them not against them. No one who shoots a grizzly is being a great hunter. Take the grizzly down with your bare hands then we'll talk. Meanwhile leave them alone and let their populations recover. Take practical measures to keep grizzlies and humans apart and stop killing wildlife for sport.

I am absolutely opposed to any plans to allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears, and urge you to not permit this action.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Americans must treasure this unique beauty. Stop the destruction of wildlife. Let wildlife be free to live the miracle of life.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live!

PLEASE say NO to grizzly bear hunting in Montana!

I am writing to voice my opposition to the trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzly Bears should not be hunted as trophies. Every animal has a unique part to play in our environment and this includes grizzlies. Grizzled aren't looking for a fight or trying to hunt people down. Yes they will, and should, defend themselves and their cubs. So if people leave them alone they leave us alone. Do some research. Learn their behaviors and contributions to the environment. And keep them safe and protected from hunters!!

I believe all killing of animals for sport/trophy hunting must be outlawed. It sends a message to our children that destroying an animal is fine for any reason, when in truth gratuitous killing of any living creature is not only wrong, but immoral, wicked, heartless and unnecessary.

I think the human race has a death wish. I won't go on and on about how it's not a good idea to annihilate all of life off the planet and decimate all remaining virgin lands, it seems that so many educated and grown adults don't recognize the right from the wrong of it. The human race must have a death wish.

I enjoy biking to Montana and photographing wild life. However, some people get their kicks only by killing an animal. To satisfy those with killing instinct, hunting Grizzly Bear should be allowed, but only with a knife and only a fully grown bear. No firearms, no projectile weapons, no traps. In case bear wins the fight, he gets to keep the trophy.

I was born and raised in Montana the iconic grizzly is a symbol of our wilderness. I realize that there are times when they are at odds with people and in these situations problem bears must be dealt with. In the hunting for trophy I feel this is against the whole concept of wilderness and the protection of the bear.
Please do not allow trophy hunting in the state if Montana.

People generally take their family vacations where they can show their children the wildlife that lives in different states. They do not take their children to see the bloody bodies of the local wildlife killed by hunters. These bears are fantastic and should be allowed to live their lives in peace and safety. They will bring a lot more money into your state if they are left alive. My family and I will never vacation in your state until you stop the killing.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I visited Yellowstone NPS last year and took the time to visit the entrance from Montana. The small town and historical arch was well worth the extra effort. All of that would not be possible without the lure of the wild animals that roam around the great national park. Bears have the same meaning to the general public as American bison, mustangs, wolves, and other wild animals that have inhabit our nations history. They deserve respect and protection, not a rug on the floor or head mounted to wall.

I am opposed to grizzly bear hunting in Montana. We vacation in Montana to hike and view wildlife. In 2014, we saw a grizzly bear running along a fen and were so pleased to see this bear roaming freely in its natural habitat. With human encroachment on historic grizzly bear range, the state of Montana should not allow further endangerment of the grizzly bear. Hunting is an endangerment of the bear.

The current Covid-19 Pandemic is yet another consequence of the way in which we thoughtlessly exploit nature, creating imbalances whose consequences could be anticipated, yet which we choose to ignore. Trophy hunting is a self-indulgent anachronism, cruel and certainly unworthy of being considered a sport. A sport is a competition between equal parties. Calling a murder a sport harkens back to Roman times when it was also considered a sport to kill Christians. It's time to move on from these primitive expressions before there is nothing left of what God so lovingly gave us to shepherd - not to kill for fun.

It is important for you to know that our world is facing a mass extinction like none ever seen before by mankind. Everything from butterflies and bees, to elephants and whales are struggling to maintain viability to survive as species. The horrid thing besides that fact, is that it is all due to mankind now covering the globe, polluting land, sea, and sky, mowing down forest after forest at alarming rates, and murdering any animal they want. We are also responsible for doing much of the actual killing, what with wolf, bear, and cougar hunts on our open range, to prevent cattle and sheep deaths, and the near elimination of horses on our open range, seeming endless trapping and hunting, as well as ruthless outright murder of our burros on the range. People cover the earth, and everywhere we go we wipe out all the animal and plant life that we don't want without impunity, or even understanding the harm we do, or even caring. Every species is inextricably connected to all the life around it. Every species holds its own niche that none other can fill in quite the same way. For instance if we were actually able to eradicate the mosquito, we would simultaneously wipe out species of birds and bats. One lives off the other, that lives off the other, and so on. Without our predators we are overrun with elk, deer, rabbits, and all other grazers, thereby creating over grazing, and soil erosion to the point even rivers are damaging their banks and being rerouted. We have come to the point that if we do not, or will not make room for our major species, and due to their interconnections they are all somewhat major, this mass extinction will come crashing down on this earth in utterly devastating ways, that will make our own survival difficult to say the least. We must have pollinators to pollinate our trees, gardens, and all other plant life. Our very food. We need the grazers to eat the abundance of plant life. We need the predators to keep the number of grazers from eating up everything. And really, don't we love it all? Isn't the world a beautiful place? Aren't the uncountable animals and plants amazing? The great and incredible variety of it all? We simply must make room for ALL of them. So if we don't want grizzlies, or wolves, or coyotes, or wild cats in our backyards, we simply must NOT build our homes in theirs. And we simply must NOT allow any finite, personal reason for wanting rid of a species to allow us to wantonly murder them. You may or may not believe in our Holy Creator, but I certainly do. The only thing you get when there is no creator, is absolutely nothing. Yet look around, and see how incredibly much surrounds us. From the fact of there being no biggest big, or smallest small, His creations are literally without end. To call him awesome is a vast understatement. It is in His book that it is proclaimed that God will bring to ruin all those ruining the earth. Your decision holds much consequence for you, as well as the world as we know it. I can only hope and pray that you vote in favor of life, and a pulling back of the "rights" of people to move in and kill anything they want without impunity. Hope for our world and all the life on her, including ourselves, will be greatly improved if you do.
I thank you for listening.

Trophy hunting lower 48 grizzly bears should never be sanctioned in this country ever again, much less any time soon. Removing even one bear for any purpose decreases the likelihood that Montana's bears help to repopulate the rest of historic grizzly range. Until they're recovered everywhere in the lower 48, they shouldn't be hunted anywhere in the lower 48.

Today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states- despite efforts to build their numbers- and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. America was a country of grizzly bears from its northern border down to the Gulf Coast of Texas. But they have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming "self-defense", poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. The last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. How can you even CONSIDER allowing more killing for a "Trophy Hunt"? How desperately do you need money that you're willing to sell permits to kill this great national treasure?

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands- nature preserves- within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. This is appalling and a degradation of our remaining American wilderness . . .

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. You will desecrate these safe corridors for this endangered population.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to protect grizzly bears- your treasured natural resource. As an American, I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Please- use your power to JUST SAY NO to this ill-conceived plan.

Please be proactive. Isn’t it ironic & sad that the state whose flag bears the Grizzly Bear no longer has any!!! Do NOT allow trophy hunting of Grizzlies in Montana - instead fund additional studies so we can learn about these apex predators. Today is Earth Day so let’s not go backwards- encourage Grizzlies to thrive & preserve their protects & the wild areas bears need.

Please do not allow the hunting of Grizzly bears. They have low reproductive rates and their numbers have been greatly diminished in the past two years through human interactions, e.g., car and train accidents, hunter self-defense, poaching, livestock protection and heavy-handed state management. As apex predators Grizzly bears play a pivotal role in maintaining a healthy forest system. Hunting them for the sake of hunting of hunting them will negatively affect the natural cycle and impact adversely on all forest systems.

I strongly oppose trophy hunting and urge the Montana Governor's Advisory Council to vote no regarding Trophy Hunting.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears including deep within Wilderness areas runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears should be protected. They are a vital part of ecosystems and their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate naturally rather than being artificially limited by humans, particularly humans who want to kill for 'sport'. Trophy hunting is frankly obscene, and I am dismayed that the state of Montana would consider allowing it rather than protecting animals that are part of the North American natural heritage. Moreover, grizzlies have a low reproduction rate and suffer from poaching, cars, trains, livestock 'protection', etc. The grizzly population needs to be allowed to recover, not be decimated for supposed 'fun'.

Once in the Canadian Rockies I had a grizzly encounter that was the most terrifying and memorable event of my life. She spared me after a few charges where I stood my ground, and I walked away unharmed. Afterwards, I was in awe of her power and magnificence. We are so lucky to still have these amazing creatures in the US. They deserve protection. What kind of people are we if we kill these animals just so some egotistical hunters can put a Head on their wall? Aren't these animals worth more than that? You would be killing off a main reason why millions of tourists come to Yellowstone, to see animals like that. Economically, it makes more sense to have them alive. Who cares if they kill a few ranchers cattle? What are cattle doing grazing in the mountains anyways? The bears were there long before. DO THE RIGHT THING AND CHOSE LIFE.

How is it possible that this is even a discussion point? The Grizzly Bear is on the Endangered Species act. That tells you it is seriously ENDANGERED and someone wishes to kill for the sake of having a 'stuffed' trophy some place and the bragging rights with friends that they killed a grizzly bear.
I pray that you see by allowing this to happen is fundamentally saying that the Grizzly Bear does not have a right to exist anymore. Imagine a world without these magnificent creatures and the impact to the ecosystem. Please consider carefully - we are all in this together and every species plays its role in the natural balance of life.

please stop this. it is wrong and you know it. no animal ever deserves this kind of treatment. they are not our property for us to do with as we please. they are living breathing beings too just like you and me. they didn't do anything to anybody to be treated like this. all they want is to live on this earth just like any of the rest of us in peace and harmony without people being mean and nasty to them and they have that right. so this needs to be stopped and now.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Encounters with wildlife are the best memories from my many travels, from Moose in Grand Teton National Park, bighorn sheep in Zion National Park, Grizzly Bears, Bison and Wolves in Yellowstone National Park, Coyotes in Joshua Tree National Park to playful Sea Lions off the Catalina Islands.

Hunting these and similar wild animals will reduce the opportunity for future encounters of this kind for all citizens.

Grizzly bears are protected under the ESA for very good, scientific reasons. They are also iconic animals representing the wilds of America. I am 100% opposed to hunting and killing any bears, especially Grizzly Bears.

Bears bring inmate money as tourist attractions than hunting ever will. Also, the damage done to Montana's image to tourists will be forever tarnished if you start killing off endangered, iconic keystone species.

The trophy hunting of grizzly bears is unacceptable. With the natural and human caused deaths of these animals is already too high and further dessimation of the bears is inhumane and despicable. Please do not allow this to happen. Thank you very much.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Therefore, I am completely opposed to trophy hunting of bears. Thank you.

Dear Sirs:

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

If trophy hunting is allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Please do not let this happen. We need to save our planet and the wildlife on it.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

IN light of COVID-19 we MUST change how we interact with Wildlife and the Natural World! Millions of people throughout the years have been opposed to lethal methods of "management" and it has been proven that they do NOT reduce human/animal conflict-nor do anything to "conserve" wildlife or wild places!
The BEST available science MUST be used and NON-lethal methods MUST be used!!!
The Grizzly Bear is also a species of conservation concern and is NOT thought to have recovered-since they have very low reproductive rates!
It IS the 21st century and man has done ENOUGH damage to this planet-we are in the 6th largest extinction rate ever recorded. We are seeing the decline in biodiversity and the decimation of ecosystems all over the country and the world.
This virus is a Zoonotic one-originating from human consumption and contact with animals-both wild and domestic. We CANNOT go back to "business as usual" and MANY people are now mobilizing for a serious change in policies, attitudes and actions regarding wildlife and wild places!
It is FOOLISH, IRRESPONSIBLE to continue to use savage, barbaric acts of violence-invading wilderness areas and removing animals from those areas-exposing blood and other bodily fluids to humans!!!!
Man always says they are the "superior" species-yet we do NOT learn from lessons and reduce our actions to those of cavemen, neanderthals!!!!
It is TIME to END ALL killing contests, "trophy" hunting, trapping as well-Montana-YOU show the WORLD how backward, out of touch, and how unaware YOU are!!!!!
STOP KILLING GRIZZLIES and also STOP KILLING WOLVES, BISON!!!! YOU have a HORRIFIC reputation as one of the most INHUMANE, DISGUSTING states when it comes to animal welfare and conservation!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Succinctly, it's a crazy, extremely terrible idea. The grizzly population is too small to endure this latest threat, just for the "sport" of killing for a trophy--as if that could make somebody more of a macho man. Or whatever.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of these beautiful creatures. It is not sporting for a human to kill another animal just because s/he can do so, when the purpose is not self-defense or sustenance/subsistence. The only trophy we should have, if we are so lucky, is the joy to see a grizzly from a respectful and safe distance, a story to tell, and perhaps the opportunity to shoot a photograph of the occasion. The public lands on which the grizzlies roam are intentionally and justly public - for the good of all, not for the privileged few. Grizzlies are at a tiny fraction of their former population and range before humans joined their habitat, and they have a low birthrate and an important place as an apex predator in their natural environment there. Any hunting, besides the immorality of it on principle, has the potential to quickly wipe them out and disturb the balance of the ecosystem.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

They are rare and precious. They are the top of their food chain and important to the environmental balance. Humans allege to be intelligent & compassionate. There is no justification for killing animals for fun ,as a trophy. There is nothing intelligent. Moral or kind about murdering wildlife. Shame on Montana. Wildlife does not need management by humans as we destroy nature's balance and cause harm &damage

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Dear Council,
While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. Please continue to protect them and do not allow them to be hunted and killed.

Thank you.

It's time to end trophy hunting. People can observe or use cameras and preserve these animals for others to enjoy.

PLEASE DON'T allow hunting of the grizzly bear as a so-called "trophy." Perhaps it is true that the grizzly has recovered enough so as to be taken off the endangered species list, but to allow trophy hunting, particularly so close to national parks and reserves, is to invite and encourage all the negative actions that man took that ended with the grizzly being on the endangered species list to begin with.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Please do not let this happen!!! It is unconscionable!!!

Thank you for taking the time to read my comment and possibly consider not opening Grizzly Bear hunting in the state of Montana. While the Grizzly is still protected by the Endangered Species Act, that does not mean it is not suffering from lack of habitat, illegal hunting, and basic survival. If and when the Grizzly Bear becomes de-listed from the endangered list, trophy hunting will add another strike against this species and its ability to survive.
We, being a part of nature herself, need to begin to build a healthy vision for all living things for our future generations to enjoy and love. We are interconnected and when any part of that network breaks, we are all effected in a negative way. This is part of the problem with the current pandemic we are experiencing now. The system as we knew it will not sustain us anymore. If the Grizzly Bear is hunted for trophies (or other reasons) down to the point of extinction, the wild where it once thrived will no longer be healthy because the connection is broken.
Please, our wildlife has suffered enough because of past decisions by humans. Give our wildlife a chance to live and thrive in the wild. Thank you.

To reduce a great creature to a stuffed animal to brag about with other psychotic individuals is narcissism at its worst. Any one involved in making grizzly bears available for trophy hunting - I hope the same happens to you or your family.

Enough with hunting animals that are not for consumption! Bears, Lions, Wolves, Giraffes are not for eating...so why are they hunted??? It isn't wise for us as humans to thin out populations of animals. If we lose even one species, we will suffer a trickle down effect! Please stop the madness!!!!!

Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzlies in Montana. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please, no trophy hunting grizzly Bears.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

It would be purely selfish for anyone wanting to KILL a Grizzly at this point in time! If they need a thrill let them take a photo!

As humans continue to impinge on the territory of wildlife the answer is not to allow hunting of that wildlife. Man needs to respect and live along side species such as the grizzly whose number are still significantly low.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Thank you for your time.

Hello!
I oppose any trophy hunting of our precious endangered Grizzly bears.
Grizzly Bears need a safe haven, a safe living area, free from slaughter, poaching, trophy hunting and killing.
They need critical habitat to ensure their survival.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and re-occupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I remember an elementary school field trip to visit former Native American lands. We learned how grizzly bears used to live in that location, and as a young student I felt saddened and angered that there were no more grizzly bears in our area. It is our job to ensure amazing creators like the grizzly bear stays protected, for future generations to see, and for the grizzly's ecosystem to flourish. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Do not allow trophy hunting of grizzlies for any reason even if they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears should not be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

No reason to hunt them! The sight of a grizzly bear is a huge draw for public sightings. After being confined and thinking that life was pretty much ruined for our immediate future, the bears would add an incredible draw that you could use to teach and foster good future planning. Please do not encourage their slaughter!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Since the iconic grizzy bear has disappeared from ninety somr percentage of its range I see no reason to allow trophy hunting to reduce the numbers of a species that was getting close to extinction not that many years ago and I believe should be allowed to continue to increase in numbers. According to a map of the United States I saw great portions of America once had a large population of Grizzlies rosming the woods and fielda. Also since scientists say we have entered the sixth mass extinction of species I see no reason to allow trophy hunting or any hunting of the grizzly bear at this time. Please don't endanger these animals to the point of extinction.

I don't believe that Grizzly Bears should be hunted for trophy only nor hunted at all although with that being said there may periodically need to be special hunts to keep the population of the grizzly bear within a predetermined population range determined by appropriate authorities. The only time a grizzly bear should be hunted and killed outside of authorizied special hunts is if a known bear is posing a threat to nearby human life.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit.

As a frequent tourist to Montana (I have friends and family there) I strongly and completely oppose the opening and expansion of grizzly bear trophy hunting. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the species to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for survival. This would reduce the appeal of tourism to people like me, and would hurt the Montana wilderness and economy. Please do not allow grizzly trophy hunting.

Thank you.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The Grizzly Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.
While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
If the state of Montana allows trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA, hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. As such, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.
Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
Therefore, based on the above reasons, I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

At this time, I am making very clear to the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that I do not support the trophy hunting and killing of any endangered animal in our country,

Please be aware that Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. At this time, I thank you for your consideration of my letter and I am making very clear to the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that I am strongly opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. I very much urge the advisory council to please not approve this inhumane trophy hunting and killing of the grizzly bear. Please understand that the Great Bear represents an iconic symbol of our western wildlife which is very valuable for all Americans. Due to the significant increase in grizzly bear deaths over the last two years in Montana, the Great Bear remains an endangered animal which should not be delisted nor should be allowed to be hunted and killed as a trophy animal.

Biodiversity is threatened more than ever by 7.6 billion humans consuming natural habitats on Earth and global warming emasculating ecosystems. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2% of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting is allowed by the state of Montana, iconic wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness will no longer be safe havens for grizzly bears.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing them to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

All animals deserve to be treated humanely and spared suffering , they do not deserve the atrocities that humans inflict upon them.

Please do NOT allow trophy hunting of grizzlies on public lands in Montana after they are de-listed from the ESA.
Grizzly bears are a keystone species and they deserve a safe haven on our public lands.

My home state (Florida) permitted a black bear hunt a few years ago and it was a disaster - cubs and nursing mothers were killed despite a minimum weight requirement. The public outcry afterwards was so intense that no hunts have been held since.
Grizzly bear population numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

There was a time when it made sense to kill Grizzly bears, when there were only a few people and a lot of bears. That time has long since passed. Now there are billions of humans and very few bears. They too are God's creatures and it's our absolutely duty to protect the few that are left. We have learned that within all ecosystems, every creature and plant has a purpose and when any of them are removed, these systems will eventually collapse. With knowledge, comes responsibility and it is our responsibility to protect what little wildlife we have left.

Hunting grizzlies is a horrible blood sport. There is nothing at all sporting about killing a defenseless animal from a far distance with an overpowered weapon. Now, if the hunter wants to go head to head with the bear with nothing but his hands (or her hands) I would go along with the idea. Other wise it is simply murder.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Hello:
Because I live out of state, you may at first feel inclined to disregard my input on behalf of my family. But our family has spent thousands of dollars in Montana during periodic visits to the greater Yellowstone region. While scenic beauty and rural values are valuable, our primary reason for traveling to Montana and spending our dollars is to see the iconic wildlife of the region -- both inside and outside the invisible lines of Park lands.

I don't expect to change strongly held views about grizzly bears or whether they should be protected as key parts of the overall ecosystem. Whether the Council agrees with that is irrelevant. What hopefully DOES matter is that the greater the chance to see grizzly bears, the more compelling it is for my family to choose Montana to visit rather than the Grand Canyon, Disneyland, San Francisco, or Crater Lake.
It is not just a question of minimizing the killing of grizzly bears in order to profit from the tourism value they create - it is also a question for many families of whether they feel motivated to stay in lodges, purchase fishing licenses, take tours, etc. in a state that either does or doesn't show balance in how it manages iconic wildlife species.
If the Council wishes to promote Montana as a class AAA travel destination ("visit, spend, enjoy, and then please go home") then the Advisory Council will NOT approve hunting of grizzly bears in either national forest areas surrounding National Park lands nor in national forest wilderness areas.
Think logically. Where does the state often desire grizzlies to spend most of their time? Close to ranches and communities, or in remote Wilderness Areas?
With all due respect to those who take pride in shooting grizzly bears, Montana can show it has balanced and reasonable wildlife policies if no grizzly hunting is allowed surrounding the Parks and in national forest Wilderness Areas.

I understand the state of Montana is considering allowing hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. I am not a resident of Montana but I am a resident of Alaska & I understand the need to harvest predators. I totally support hunting of grizzly bears on all public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. When you have an increasing number of bears, it is time to harvest and keep the populations all in check. Good job Montana. This increases opportunity for hunters.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
But note this...Without a habitable planet to live on, breathable air, forests, drinkable water, food and the SUPPORTING COHABITATING SPECIES we need to grow that food -then judicial reform, human rights, poverty, healthcare, taxes, education, freedom - NOTHING WILL MATTER.

I urge you to not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears. They are on the ESA for a reason and this protection should continue. Especially at a time like this, with tens of thousands of Americans dying from COVID19, let's protect other species and not bring death to them as well. Please do the right thing and do not allow this to happen. They will be taken to the brink of extinction once again

It is truly sad that people feel they need to kill bears. If they're starving and need to eat, that's one thing. But if they do it for fun or they hang them on their wall or make a rug of them, that's altogether stupid, inhumane, ugly, and just so, so sick. We need bears to be alive and to be part of the ecosystem.

I write to strongly request that no trophy hunting be allowed of grizzly bears. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

As a firm believer in the value of biodiversity, I would like to see the grizzly bear returned to its former mountain habitats. I know that there are predation issues, but I would advocate a compromise that seeks to protect livestock (we know the grizzly is not a hazard to human life) while giving the grizzly plenty of room to roam. Where is the terrain and paucity of human population better for that than in Montana, the grizzly capital for our entire nation. You should be doing your part to protect the grizzly for the benefit of the whole nation.

Thank you for your consideration.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

NO HUNTING OF GRIZZLIES.

Thank you.

Why anyone would want to needlessly kill a grizzly bear for sport or a trophy, or any other reason, is beyond me. If for no other reason, please consider how much forbidding this kind of inhumane hunting would mean to the many thousands of people who visit Montana every year, just to view your amazing wildlife, wild lands, and parks, and all the money they happily spend in your state.

Trophy hunting of an endangered species is never acceptable. Despite the (extremely) limited reintroduction of grizzly bears in the Yellowstone Ecosystem these bears remain an endangered animal in the Northern Rocky Mountains and the northern US generally. Trophy hunting of these animals would be just one more threat to their existence in the northern states and is an unnessasary gift at taxpayer expense to a very small group of people who continue to oppose majority opinion about the environment.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA is simply wrong! Trophy hunting of grizzly bears should not be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. I whole heartedly disagree! Having worked for the US Forest Service on the Flathead N.F. there is room for the bears too! Leave them be as they have a role to play in the ecosystem. Thanks!

Trophy hunting is not the ethical way to keep a species from overpopulating. Please utilize the scientists with FWP to a design a better way for population control of these great grizzlies... has any thought of contraception as was used on wild horse populations?

The grizzly bear population, while slightly recovered from its historic low levels, remains far below what would be optimal to ensure Grizzlies can continue to survive amidst the ravages if climate change and human caused environmental degradation. Grizzlies are an indispensible part of North American ecosystems. They deserve a chance.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

In 1975 grizzly bears were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA) after being pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states. While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. De-listing the grizzly bear from the ESA and allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies on Montana public lands, including wild lands within America’s National Wilderness Preservation System, would run counter to current scientific data and programs for grizzly bear species survival. The shooting of grizzly bears by trophy hunters would diminish grizzly bear numbers and endanger the recovery of grizzly bear populations and their occupation of critical habitat essential for survival of the species.

Grizzly bears are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, based on scientific data. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am writing to you because I am vehemently opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. The majority of the public (including everyone I know) vastly prefers protecting wilderness for large species like Grizzlies, over allowing cheap grazing for livestock. You do not have the right to allow decimation of a keystone species to benefit a few financially. It is disgusting that this has been allowed to this extent already. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
Do the right thing - PROTECT the Grizzly Bear. Thank you.

“No Trophy Hunting”

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch’s logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
So again, pls no trophy hunting of grizzly bears!

Covid-19 can be transmitted to other mammals. Therefore, we do not need to spread it throughout our forests. We must value the science behind protecting species so that their numbers can rebound to a level that will ensure their species with thrive for generations to come.

I am deeply opposed to any sort of trophy hunting. It serves no purpose other than killing innocent animals. Grizzly bears, when delisted, will still not be at the numbers they should be to remain viable. Public lands should not be open to trophy hunting for any species. they are public for a reason. One of them is to provide safe haven for wildlife. To provide senseless killing on public lands would be a travesty and a betrayal of everything public lands are meant to be.

Please do not allow trophy or any other kind of hunting of Grizzly bears. These magnificent animals must be protected. We need to start caring for our wildlife. If we don’t protect these animals, they will at some point disappear. We need to show the world that we are better than the senseless hunting of these animals for trophies. Please do the right thing and protect these bears.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.
Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Grizzly Bears are important parts of healthy, functional ecosystems. Biodiversity is endangered everywhere. You should be aware that large numbers of grizzlies are being killed each year already. Wilderness areas should be just that, wild! We have driven grizzles from most of their former range. Leave them alone in the few wilderness areas we have so that their numbers can grow and they can reoccupy critical habitat.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

As a Science Teacher/Environmental Educator, Science/STEM Professional, and an Environmental/Wildlife/Wilderness/Biodiversity Advocate, I wholeheartedly encourage you to protect the grizzly bear and PLEASE allow NO trophy hunting for any species!!

The great grizzly bear should be allowed to flourish; NOT hunted to extinction!!

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would NO longer be safe havens for the Great Bear!

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live! Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to natural habitat conditions, NOT some human-conceived population limit!

Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live!! So PLEASE do the right thing and protect these great bears and their natural habitat!! Thanks!

Please prevent trophy hunting of grizzly bears and allow these majestic animals to live naturally without introducing human predators into the wild! Thank you so much for considering this approach, which keeps humans and wild animals in their respective domains without the possibility of endangering each other. It is incredibly important that we respect wild lands and wild species and that we limit as much as at all possible further human encroachment on these areas, so that the animals and ecosystems can thrive naturally. Many thanks again for your consideration. Best, Maria

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Dear State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council,

I entirely oppose the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Trophy hunting is just a bad way to manage wildlife. It encourages unnecessary, indiscriminate, and inappropriate killing of animals that may damage the sustainable survival of the species. Often the targets of trophy kills are the healthy, desirable animals. This is the opposite of managing a species for optimum survival. And when a population of a species is endangered, ANY killing is often unwarranted. The entire habitat is affected by the killing off of too many or the wrong animals of one species.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.
Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.
Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am strongly opposed to trophy hunting of the grizzly bear. We are trying to increase their numbers. Climate change is taking a toll on nature as it is. Every living creature has a purpose in the balance of nature. When one population is decimated another rises to take it's place. That upsets other parts of nature.

Many people visit Yellowstone,Glacier and other scenic locatons in and close to Montana to see wildlife. For these eco tourists to get to see a grizzly is a real treat. Grizzlies face many difficulties, including human encroachment on their territories, climate change and its many implications, and habitat degradation. Healthy ecosystems depend on the presence of apex predators like grizzlies. If a hunter shoots a bear, he goes home with a trophy, but no one else gets to enjoy seeing that animal. If an eco tourist takes a photo of a bear, it will still be around for others to watch and photograph. Eco tourism related to grizzly bears is good business. My husband a d I paid a substantial amount of money to watch grizzlies in Canada. We would have jumped at the chance if a similar opportunity was available in Montana. Eco tourism would present new opportunities for job creation in Montana. I feel that the grizzlies are worth far more alive than as trophies.

It is man’s responsibility to preserve and protect all life on this planet, and has no rights to murder any species. Grizzly bears are a sentient life form with intelligence, communication abilities and families so act intelligently and respect and protect them.

As a frequent visitor to Montana, I want to express my opposition to the idea of trophy hunting grizzly bears. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am deeply opposed to any option that includes grizzzly beat trophy hunting.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related “control” actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Thank you for your time.
