Re: Wolf hunting and trapping regulation proposal for 2021-2022

Dear Chair Robinson, Vice-Chair Tabor, and Honorable Members of the Fish and Wildlife Commission,

On behalf of the Humane Society of the United States and our Montana supporters, I am writing regarding the proposal for the 2021-2022 wolf hunting and trapping regulations. Bills passed during the state’s legislative session mandating a drastic increase in the number of wolves killed using controversial and cruel methods called into question Montana’s reputation as a responsible steward of the state’s wildlife, as well as its desirability as a wildlife watching tourist destination.

The new laws put Montana’s wolves in jeopardy. Senate Bill 314, as well as House Bills 224 and 225, allow unprecedented wolf-killing levels that will undermine their conservation, reduce their important ecological roles, and splinter their cohesive family packs. Furthermore, those bills permit killing methods that are egregiously cruel and will cast doubt on Montana’s ability to act as a responsible steward of the charismatic wildlife that people travel from across the world to see and spend billions of tourism dollars in Montana’s local economies. Not only are hunters and trappers already killing record numbers of wolves in Montana, but there is no scientifically-, ethically-, or economically-justifiable reason to kill them in large number. Such excessive killing will not boost elk numbers but will exacerbate conflicts with livestock because killing a single wolf can cause a pack to dissolve—leaving young wolves to find an easy meal without the guidance of their pack mates.

In response to the passage of these laws and of Senate Bill 1211 in Idaho, on May 26, 2021, the Humane Society of the United States, Humane Society Legislative Fund, Center for Biological Diversity, and Sierra Club petitioned the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to restore federal protections under the Endangered Species Act to gray wolves. Because the recent legislation in these two states calls for the near eradication of wolves, the petition explains that returning wolves to federal management is both legally required and necessary for these wolves’ survival and recovery.¹ The Endangered Species Act requires that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service respond to the petition within 90 days.

Additionally, on June 23, 2021, Earthjustice, on behalf of the Humane Society of the United States and seven other wildlife protection and conservation organizations, provided official notice of the organizations intent to sue to each member of the Commission for violations of Section 9 of the Endangered Species Act. 16 U.S.C. §

1538(a)(1)(B). That notice letter, attached hereto and incorporated by reference into this comment, explains that authorization of wolf trapping and snaring in grizzly bear and Canada lynx habitat is likely to cause the unlawful take of threatened species for which the Commission will be liable under the ESA. The organizations intend to take legal action to enforce the ESA's take prohibition if the Commission does not remedy this violation within 60 days of the date of that letter.

In the meantime, it is crucial that this Commission acts responsibly and limits the harms these reckless new laws could cause on wolves, the ecosystem, and Montana's economy. The Humane Society of the United States remains strongly opposed to all wolf trophy hunting and trapping, and, for the reasons described below, we urge the Commission not to increase the bag limit or the number of wolves that can be killed under one license, not to extend the trapping season in any zone, not to allow night hunting or the use of baits for hunting/trapping, and to retain quota areas. Instead, we urge the commission to safeguard wolves from certain jeopardy.

1. Killing a single wolf can have an additive or even super-additive effects

While Senate Bill 314 directs the Commission to reduce the wolf population, Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks (FWP) has anticipated that this is already happening. According to FWP, record numbers of Montana's wolves have already been killed. In 2020, 328 wolves were killed--26% more than the 2012-2019 average. While the 2020 wolf population estimate has not yet been released, it is expected that the population declined approximately 20%, from 1,150 wolves to approximately 900-950 wolves.²

Furthermore, scientific research demonstrates that hunting and trapping wolves can result in death and disruption beyond that individual.³ The best available science describes this as "additive" and "super-additive" mortality.⁴ Killing single adult wolves can result in the loss of entire packs because the loss of a breeding adult disrupts the pack's social structure, and can cause the loss of dependent offspring by starvation.⁵ Killing wolves causes severe additive-mortality effects, because their complex pack structure makes them particularly susceptible to social disruption.⁶ The human-caused death of individual wolves harms their family group cohesion.⁷ The human-caused loss of breeding females has been shown to cause complete dissolution of social groups and abandonment of territory.⁸ In this way, the new laws could have a quick and devastating effect on Montana's wolf population that not only puts them into jeopardy but could trigger a relisting by the USFWS.

For these reasons, the commission must not allow the killing of an unlimited number of wolves by a single license holder, as proposed by Senate Bill 314. Rather, the commission should not increase the bag limit, nor should it increase the number of wolves than can be killed under one license. Additionally, the threshold of 450 wolves killed—likely half of the current population—needed to initiate a Commission quorum, "with potential for rapid in-season adjustments to hunting and trapping regulations" is much too high. This threshold must be significantly lowered to be meaningful.

2. Traps and snares are cruel and indiscriminate

Wolves in Montana are not trapped for food, but rather are killed for recreation, trophies and, in some cases, to fuel the ever-declining global fur trade. Non-target wildlife, including black bears, "Threatened" grizzly bears and lynx, and family pets such as dogs and cats are at risk of needless and unjustifiable suffering and death because of this outdated and inhumane practice. Moreover, as explained in the attached Sixty-Day Notice of Intent to Sue letter, the Commission is liable for violations of Section 9 of the Endangered Species Act caused by its authorization of wolf trapping and snaring in Western Montana's lynx and grizzly bear habitat.

THE HUMANE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES

Steel-jaw leghold traps are powered by strong springs that slam shut on an animal and exert excruciating force. Proulx et al. (2015) investigated how trapping affects wolves. Their results are disturbing:

Killing neck snares are inadequate for consistently and quickly rendering canids unconscious. Because of collateral blood circulation, it is almost impossible to stop blood flow to and from the brain by tightening a snare around the neck. Also, it is difficult to collapse the trachea due to its rigid cartilaginous rings and adjacent musculature. Furthermore, weather conditions impact the function of snares, and the animals' stride and posture when entering the loop affect capture location on the body. Also, in an attempt to escape, animals frequently chew the snare, and cut their mouths and break their teeth. If they do not escape, they then suffer a slow death with the snare embedded in their neck. Animals may develop a water or jelly head when not killed quickly, i.e., an extreme case of edema due to watery fluid collecting in the tissues of the cervical region. If they escape with the snare still closed on their neck, they may suffer for many days or weeks.⁹

Additionally, wildlife can sustain joint dislocation, severed tendons, and other internal injuries as they fight against the snare.¹⁰

In addition to the injuries caused by the trap itself, animals can languish and die slowly from shock, dehydration, blood loss, starvation, predation, or exposure to the elements.¹¹ In Montana, trappers need to check their traps only every 48 hours. During that time, trapped animals can chew or twist off their feet or limbs, or otherwise mutilate themselves, in a desperate attempt to escape from the trap.¹²

Traps often capture non-target animals, such as family pets, raptors, threatened and endangered species, or mother animals with their young.¹³ Furthermore, snares are inexpensive, and trappers could put dozens out onto Montana's wild lands. Estimates are hard to come by, but some research indicates that as many as 18 non-target animals may be captured for each target animal captured, depending on the trap type and methods used.¹⁴

While the Humane Society of the United States recognizes that House Bill 224 mandated the use of snares, we remain vehemently opposed to the use of traps and snares, especially on public lands and in habitat occupied by lynx, grizzly bears, and other endangered and threatened species. We appreciate that FWP has recommended some measures to limit snaring to private lands and limit the damage caused by snares to non-target wildlife and pets and urge this commission to implement additional safeguards. Additionally, it is crucial that the commission does not extend the wolf trapping season.

3. Night hunting and baiting are unethical

Hunting at night is dangerous and gives hunters an unfair advantage. The first rule of hunting is that a hunter should positively identify his quarry before he pulls the trigger, but with visual impairment from hunting in low light, accidents and mistakes are inevitable creating a dangerous situation in the field. Furthermore, baiting could attract non-target wildlife and pets to traps and snares. Placing baits into the wild landscape causes wolves to guard them and kill hunting hounds as is commonplace in Wisconsin.¹⁵ Baiting is considered unsporting, even among many sportsmen. It is not “fair chase,” the cornerstone of ethical hunting.¹⁶ Furthermore, spoiled baits are also toxic and even fatal to wildlife.¹⁷ Bait sites concentrate wildlife of different species and thus increase the potential for disease and parasite transmission between species, especially rabies and chronic wasting disease, and potentially mange.¹⁸ Bait sites also require ease of access and biologists have noted habitat destruction at these places, including the spread of invasive plants.¹⁹ Finally, bait piles are smelly and irritating to other outdoor recreationists (who could be in harm’s way if they stumble unknowingly onto a wolf- or bear-occupied bait site), and if they are near roadways, can endanger wildlife who travel near or on roadways to access bait piles.²⁰

The commission must not allow these new practices.

4. Quotas in areas bordering national parks must be maintained

While the Humane Society of the United States strongly believes the commission should establish a no-hunting buffer zone around the boundaries of Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks, it is crucial that the existing quotas in some hunting units bordering the Parks are not increased. These quotas are necessary to reduce the killing of Yellowstone and Glacier’s naïve and vulnerable wolves who cross the invisible boundary outside of the parks. Due to their repeated exposure to Park visitors, many Yellowstone and Glacier National Park wolves have learned to tolerate people, which make them easy prey to hunters. In the past, famously beloved wolves such as 926F (also known as Spitfire) have journeyed past the Yellowstone border into Montana only to be killed by a hunter. This deprives the millions of national park visitors of the opportunity to view one of America’s most treasured and iconic species.

5. There are no scientifically, ethically, or economically justifiable reasons to kill wolves

A. Killing wolves and coyotes will not boost deer and elk numbers

While arguments made in favor of the passage of the new legislation included concerns about ungulate populations, the best available science demonstrates that indiscriminately killing native carnivores will not grow deer and elk herds for hunters. A myriad of factors including habitat loss or fragmentation, disease, increased hunting, poaching, and harsh winters, affect ungulate populations.²¹

Simply killing wolves and other native carnivores will not bring back the ungulate herds, but not persecuting wolves could help Montana rid its ungulate herds of infectious disease, which is spreading to nearby states.²²

The scientific consensus for the last several decades has generally concluded that coursing predators like wolves and coyotes modulate prey populations and make them more vigorous,²³ including removing the sick and weak animals who would die of other natural causes anyway.²⁴ Predator-control schemes, including expanding hunting, are an unreliable way to increase the abundance of ungulates.²⁵ Ironically, human hunters are responsible for the decline of large-bodied mammals.²⁶

Additionally, elk and other ungulate hunting numbers in Montana continue to be consistently high. Across the state, elk populations are reported to be at or above objective. In fact, in the 2020 Big Game

Hunting Forecast, FWP reported that, “These are good times for elk hunters, as Montana elk populations continue to be strong across most of the state.”

B. Killing wolves, coyotes, and foxes will not resolve already rare conflicts with livestock

Similarly, the myth that killing wolves, coyotes, and foxes will somehow remedy already rare conflicts with livestock does not hold up under scientific scrutiny. Livestock losses to wolves are already rare in Montana and in every jurisdiction in which they live.²⁷ According to data from the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), livestock producers in Montana lose 89 times more cattle to causes like disease, respiratory problems, and bad weather than to wolves.²⁸ Furthermore, in calendar year 2019, USDA-Wildlife Services confirmed just 69 cattle, 21 sheep, and 7 other animals were killed by wolves in Montana.²⁹ To put that into perspective, at the start of 2019 there were a total of 2.5 million cattle and 215,000 sheep in the state.³⁰ In response to these few conflicts, 72 wolves were killed in 2019 (56 by USDA Wildlife Services and 16 by private citizens when wolves were seen chasing or threatening livestock).³¹ Data from the Montana Board of Livestock show a trend of low livestock losses to native carnivores.

Additionally, many studies have questioned the efficacy of killing native carnivores to reduce conflicts between the native carnivores and livestock.³² Non-lethal methods to prevent conflicts are more effective, economical, and humane than killing canids. New studies show that the best remedies for protecting cattle, sheep and other domestic animals come from non-lethal measures.³³

For example, in a seven-year case study of open-range sheep on public grazing lands in Idaho (known as the Wood River Wolf Project), researchers strategically applied a variety of non-lethal deterrents and animal husbandry techniques on an adaptive basis. In the adjacent, comparable study’s control area, where wolves are routinely lethally controlled and no nonlethal protection measures were applied, sheep losses were 3.5 times higher over the seven-year period than in the study area after weighting the number of sheep killed by sheep days. Furthermore, no wolves were killed in the study area and sheep depredation losses to wolves were just 0.02 percent of the total number of sheep present—the lowest loss rate among sheep-grazing areas in wolf-occupied habitat statewide, thus demonstrating that non-lethal deterrents are far more effective than lethal ones.³⁴

Organizations such as the Montana-based Tom Miner Basin Association provide another example of successfully utilizing non-lethal deterrents and livestock husbandry techniques (e.g., range riders, fladry, flashing lights and guard animals) to minimize conflicts between native carnivores, livestock and humans. Hilary Zaranek-Anderson, co-founder of the Association and Range Rider Coordinator, says, “We use a low-stress approach to livestock handling that encourages cattle to work together as a herd. We gather them together in open areas whenever possible in the evening, especially calves with mothers, which makes them less vulnerable to predation at night.”³⁵ Range riders also monitor cattle for sickness and injury, removing them from the herd so they don’t become targets for predation.

C. Allowing excessive killing of wolves casts doubt on Montana’s ability to act as a responsible steward of wildlife and as a destination for wildlife-watching tourists

Due to its iconic and rare wildlife, Montana is a top destination for wildlife-watching tourists. According to the National Park Service: “In 2020, 3.9 million park visitors spent an estimated $445 million in local gateway regions while visiting National Park Service lands in Montana,” and those expenditures supported 6,690 jobs.³⁶ But studies show that killing wolves in areas adjacent to protected areas (such as Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks) significantly reduces wolf sightings in those protected areas. By encouraging more wildlife killing, these bills could irreparably harm Montana's reputation as a destination for wildlife-watching tourists. A letter sent to the Governor by over 3,300 photographers and videographers better spells out the import of Montana's wildlife-tourism economics and is attached hereto.³⁷

These new laws also violate the North American Model of Wildlife Conservation and undermine Montana's public trust responsibility. The state has a duty to serve as a steward of Montana's wildlife for the benefit of present and future generations³⁸—including wildlife watchers and other non-consumptive users. Instead, these new laws serve the small minority who wish to kill these animals. Their passage and implementation will surely erode public attitudes toward hunting and trapping and create doubt in the state's ability to manage wildlife for future generations. This commission has the opportunity and the responsibility to act prudently and begin to gain that trust back.

Additionally, trophy hunters are economically unimportant. Nationally, hunter numbers are in decline relative to other outdoor wildlife recreation.³⁹ Just 21% of Montana residents are paid hunting license holders, and a mere fraction of them are interested trophy hunting and trapping. A new economic study of trophy hunting in the U.S. suggests that trophy hunters benefit largely from the public and private lands largely maintained by non-hunters and that federal taxes from all Americans contribute to the funding of state wildlife management agencies.⁴⁰ Additionally, recent surveys demonstrate that Americans greatly appreciate and value wildlife, even “scary” wildlife,⁴¹ and a 2019 National Shooting Sports Foundation and Responsive Management study of Americans' attitudes towards hunting found that 71 percent of Americans disapprove of trophy hunting.⁴²

6. Conclusion

Montana cannot afford the infamy that will come with the aggressive implementation of the new bills. Allowing such an unprecedented level of killing is bad for wolves, bad for the environment, and bad for Montana's tourism industry. For these reasons, we urge the commission to follow the least aggressive options with regard to each of the proposed changes to the wolf hunting and trapping seasons, and to implement additional safeguards, such as decreasing the threshold to initiate a commission quorum “with potential for rapid in-season adjustments to hunting and trapping regulations.”

Subject: [EXTERNAL] Public Comment Regarding Wolf Season Setting Proposals - Please forward to Chair Robinson as I do not have her email

Dear FW Commission,

My name is Dan Vermillion. I represented District 2 as a Commissioner from 2007 until I stepped down in 2019. It was one of the great honors of my career. I trust that you are finding the work, while taxing at times, rewarding. FWP is one of our state's most effective executive agencies. Over the last fifty years, the Department, with support from the Commission, has created one of the great wildlife success stories of the last century. This is a tremendous legacy, and, as commissioners, you are in a unique position to strengthen this legacy, especially at a time that our fish and wildlife are under tremendous stress as they face a changing landscape dominated by new arrivals and a changing climate. Thanks for your service. It is not easy.

Montanans are deeply concerned by the new administration's approach to fish and wildlife. A significant majority are concluding that Montana's commission and department are no longer following scientific guidance and are instead proposing regulations that will turn MT into a zoo where only the wildlife that we deem appropriate, docile, or compatible with livestock have a place to call home. As commissioners, you have the opportunity, and in my opinion responsibility, to stand up to misguided legislation that is both poorly drafted and even more poorly thought out. I would assume all of you are volunteering your time because fish and wildlife is important to you. I respectfully suggest that this is a good opportunity to show that commitment to Montanan's fish and wildlife for the benefit of Montanans. I urge you to take it.

The new wolf management proposals are the most egregious display of anti predator hysteria that this state has seen in the last 50 years. As you know, there is not an elk shortage in MT. In fact, the legislature and this commission just spend a great deal of time dealing with expanding the shoulder seasons because there are "just too many elk." From a numbers perspective, I assume you are aware that when the wolves were returned to YNP in 1995, Montana had about 75,000 elk in the state. Today, that number is quickly approaching 150,000. Deer, well, those of you who have irrigated fields, can attest that Montana's deer population is doing just fine as well. So, as far as I can tell it is inconsistent to be claiming that MT has too many elk on one hand and then pursuing the eradication of MT wolves in an effort to save our ungulates. It does not add up.

So, this raises the question of what the regulations are trying to accomplish? Are the wolves preying on a lot of livestock? I am sure you have taken the time to look at the domestic livestock records from the livestock loss board and their records. In 2020, MT ranchers lost 126 cattle, 81 sheep, 22 goats, and 9 Llama/Guard Dog/Swine according to the state website. The grand economic total of loss amounted to less than 200,000 dollars statewide. While losing any amount of money can be tough on a producer, Montana has a system for offsetting that loss. However, I think each of you know that wolves generate more economic activity on a daily basis in Park County than the total dollar amount of livestock lost to wolves in all of MT in 2020. All of you are businesspeople, and I am sure you would not apply that type of logic to your business. If you don't think wolves bring millions of dollars to the Greater Yellowstone area every year, I would suggest you talk to Gardiner hotel owners, Livingston hotel owners, and any of the restaurants that feed wolf watchers heading into the Park. These proposals will irrevocably damage those small businesses and will irrevocably damage Montana's tourism economy without doing anything to improve the agriculture economy. This is neither sound economic or scientific management. It does not add up and raises the question of why the Department appears indifferent to the economic suffering these regulations will cause to our tourism economy.

I really never thought I would see MTFWP issue a regulation that described hunting at night as allowed. That is not hunting and the idea that MT FWP would be associated with that type of regulation is both an embarrassment and disturbing. The Safari Club certainly does not consider hunting at night as a hunt. It is not fair chase, and it should be used to describe the proposals. This proposal really should be called the wolf extermination regulation. It has no place in our hunting regulations since it is not hunting - it is extermination. It is not management it is eradication. I see that the proposal limited it to private land which, of course, makes sense. But, I am sure you know as well as I do that there will be some pretty serious night hunting on private land in areas where wolves live. Maybe this is acceptable if wolves are a pest or vermin. But, if wolves are wildlife, then they should not be allowed to hunt them at night. We don't hunt elk at night in MT. Why? Because that would violate our principals of fair chase.

Snaring, like night extermination operations, is also limited to private land only and this is another decision space where the department is trying to prevent conflict with those that don't think wolves should be exterminated. I applaud that effort. However, we all know snaring is much more lethal than a leg hold trap. We also know that the level of unintended catch goes way up with a snare. This means, as has been amply demonstrated in other states, that for every wolf killed by a snare, you will have multiple instances of "by-catch" of a fawn, a young calf elk, or a dog. Unfortunately, unlike a leg hold trap that injures the by-catch, a snare kills its by catch. If you look at the trapping numbers from ID, where they allow widespread snaring, our trapping success is only slightly lower than theirs. But, as Montana usually does, we are accomplishing harvest while minimizing the "by-catch." As Montanans, I would urge you to show WY and ID, and recent emigres that are now Senators, that we can trap wolves without incidental "by-catch." We can trap wolves in a way that honors the tradition of trapping and does not treat the quarry as vermin. By approving snares, you will do irreparable damage to trapping. It will convert folks who are ambivalent about trapping in MT into opponents. And, the next time there is a referendum on trapping, trapping will have a lot more opponents to deal with, and the department's wolf trapping proposals will be more than partly to blame.

I realize that you feel as though the legislature's mandate is clear. I respectfully disagree. As commissioners, there is plenty of opportunity to push back on this unwarranted and unwise intrusion into wildlife policy by politicians. Let the biologists determine the best way to accomplish the wolf harvest necessary to allow our elk and deer populations continue to grow while ensuring that livestock losses are not jeopardizing the viability of our agricultural operations. If you approve these sweeping changes, then you are complicit and will be responsible for the wolves being back on the ESA. In listening to the last Commission meeting, I heard several of you express the sentiment that you really do not have much choice but to follow the legislature's mandates. I would encourage you to articulate the shortfalls of the legislature's attempt to exterminate wolves, and then approve regulations that are consistent with sound wildlife management. If these the present misguided proposals proceed, it will be the department's management that pushes the wolves back on the List, and it will be the Department that has to explain to Montana's farmers and ranchers why they are better off with wolves as a federally managed species rather than one managed by MT FWP. Of course, if the objective is to exterminate the wolf population, and these proposals sure indicate that is the intention, then the Department and the legislature are on the right track.

I thank all of you for your service. It is not easy, but please listen to the public. They are telling you that you are headed in the wrong direction. Ask yourselves - do these proposal make economic sense? Do these proposals make biological sense? In both instances, unless the management goal is the extermination of wolves, the answer is no. Please stand up for Montana's wildlife. Please stand up for our Department. And, please manage wolves as wildlife rather than a pest. I would encourage you to listen to the public and use your discretion to establish regulations that follow the science not the misguided political aims of some in the legislature. As a state, a department, and commissioners, we can do better than this. For our state's future, we must. Thanks again for your service and good luck in your deliberations and hope you are somewhere it is cooler and wetter than Park County.

Sincerely

Dan Vermillion

RE: Sixty-Day Notice of Intent to Sue to Remedy Violations of the Endangered Species Act in Montana’s Authorization and Promotion of Snaring and Increased Trapping in Canada Lynx and Grizzly Bear Habitat

Dear Governor Gianforte, Director Warsech, and Fish and Wildlife Commission members,

I write on behalf of the Center for Biological Diversity, Friends of the Clearwater, Humane Society of the United States, International Wildlife Coexistence Network, Sierra Club, Western Watersheds Project, Wilderness Watch, and Wolves of the Rockies—and pursuant to the citizen suit provision of the Endangered Species Act (“ESA”), 16 U.S.C. § 1540(g)—to provide official notice of our intent to file suit against you, in your official capacity, for causing the likely trapping of threatened Canada lynx (“lynx”) and grizzly bears in violation of section 9 of the ESA. 16 U.S.C. § 1538(a)(1)(B). Governor Gianforte recently signed into law two wolf-trapping bills requiring Montana’s Fish and Wildlife Commission (the “Commission”) to allow the use of snares by wolf trappers and establish trapping seasons with the intent to reduce the wolf population. See H.B. 224, 67th Leg., Reg. Sess. (MT 2021) (“HB 224”) (amending MCA § 87-1-901); S.B. 314, 67th Leg., Reg. Sess. (MT 2021) (“SB 314”) (same). These bills impose a new trapping paradigm in western Montana’s lynx and grizzly bear habitat and are likely to cause incidental trapping and injury or death of these threatened species.¹

Lynx, grizzly bears, and gray wolves all inhabit similar habitat types and geographic range across western Montana, and wolf trapping therefore frequently occurs in areas where lynx and grizzlies are also present. Moreover, because snares and traps are imprecise tools, they pose a substantial risk to non-target species, including lynx and grizzlies. Snares are particularly likely to injure or kill non-target animals at a high rate. Accordingly, legislation that allows for the use of snares by the holder of a wolf-trapping license—and requires the Commission to manage hunting and trapping seasons with the intent to reduce the wolf population—is likely to result in the incidental trapping, including injury or death, of lynx and grizzly bears and thus violates section 9 of the ESA. 16 U.S.C. § 1538(a)(1)(B). To avoid unlawful take of these species, the State should, at a minimum, prohibit all trapping and snaring in occupied lynx and grizzly bear habitat. Unless the State takes action in the next 60 days to remedy this violation, the undersigned organizations will seek judicial enforcement of the ESA’s take prohibition.

I. Lynx and Grizzly Bear Habitat Is Largely Coextensive with Wolf Habitat in Montana

The threat to listed species posed by Montana’s new-wolf killing legislation is considerable because lynx and grizzly bear habitat in Montana overlaps significantly with that of gray wolves. Starting in northwest Montana—from the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem and the Cabinet-Yaak Ecosystem—lynx, grizzly, and wolf habitats extend southward into west-central Montana. At the same time, habitat for grizzlies and wolves, and to a lesser extent, lynx, extends northward into the state from Yellowstone National Park and the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem in southwest Montana. Moreover, within this range, lynx, grizzly bears, and wolves frequently occupy the same areas. Due to this substantial overlap between all three species, wolf-trapping in Montana is frequently carried out in lynx and grizzly bear habitat.

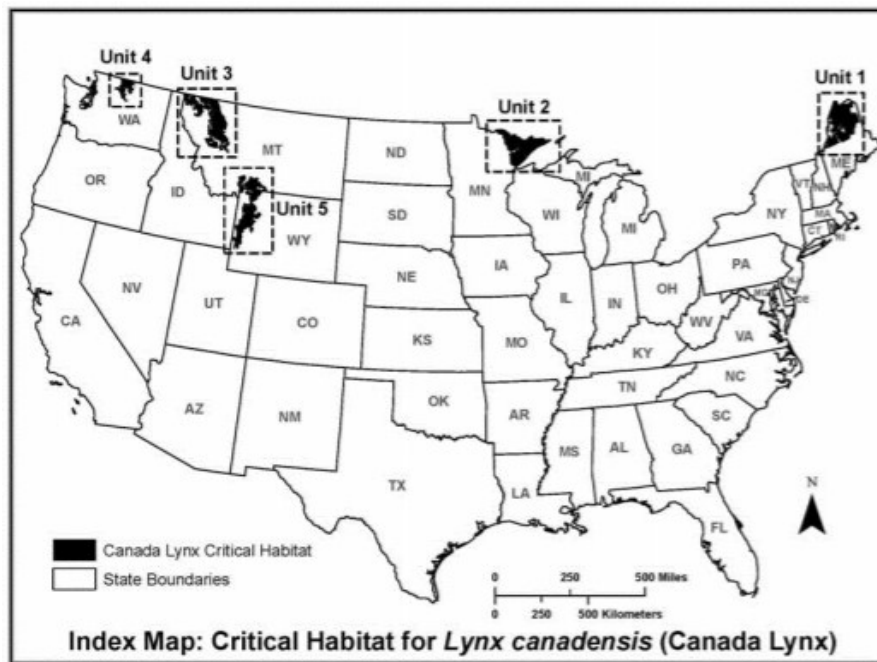

A. Threatened Lynx in Montana

Lynx depend on abundant snow, a variety of high elevation habitats for hunting and denning, and primarily snowshoe hares for prey. Ripple, et al. (2011). Both lynx and snowshoe hares currently range into “southeastern Canada and including parts of Maine, Minnesota, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, and Washington.” Murray, et al. at 1463 (2008) (emphasis added); see also U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Species Status Assessment for the Canada Lynx: Contiguous United States Distinct Population Segment, 108-113 (2017) (“2017 Status Assessment for Lynx”) (summarizing current conditions for lynx in the same states and Colorado).

¹ This letter addresses only the non-discretionary provisions of the wolf-killing bills. The signatories to this letter will also carefully monitor the Commission’s implementation of the bills’ problematic discretionary elements, including allowing the use of bait while hunting and trapping wolves.

According to NatureServe,² lynx numbers and range in the contiguous United States are substantially reduced from historical levels as result of “overexploitation by both regulated and unregulated harvest that occurred in the 1970s and 1980s.”³ In 2000, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (“FWS”) listed lynx as “threatened” under the ESA in the contiguous United States. See generally 65 Fed. Reg. 16052 (2000). FWS has also designated critical habitat for lynx across a number of the lower-48 States, including portions of northwest and southwest Montana. See Figure 1 (below). The lynx population is considered “vulnerable” in Montana.⁴

As FWS has noted, research from Montana “has documented the continued presence and broad distribution of resident lynx in much of the northwestern portion of the state.” 2017 Status Assessment for Lynx, at 50.

Lynx are also found in southwest Montana near Yellowstone National Park, though with less frequency. Id. at 157-58. While lynx are native to the Yellowstone region, lynx have also dispersed into the state following their release in Colorado. To promote lynx recovery, the Colorado Division of Wildlife (now Colorado Parks and Wildlife) released 218 lynx from Canada in Colorado between 1999 and 2006. Some of these lynx produced offspring. Lynx (both Colorado- and Canadian-born) have dispersed into Montana and other states from

In addition to depending on snow, high elevations, and snowshoe hare, lynx rely on habitat that can provide continuous forest cover for hunting and denning. Murray, et al. at (2008). Moreover, lynx survival within their chosen habitat is reliant on local trapping conditions. According to FWS, “lynx are more likely to survive, breed, and replace themselves in the breeding population if they occupy home ranges where trapping is prohibited or trapping pressure is low.” 2017 Status Assessment for Lynx, at 36.

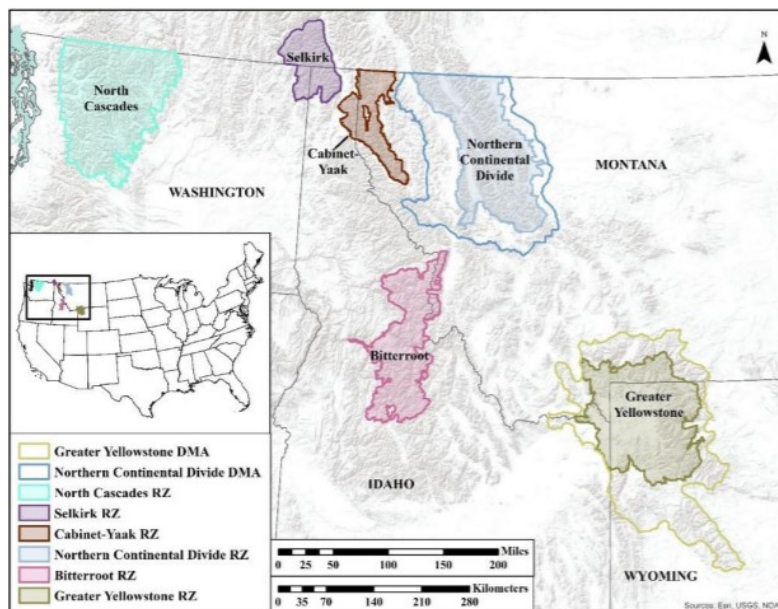

B. Threatened Grizzly Bears in Montana

Grizzly bears once numbered roughly 50,000 individuals in the western United States. FWS, Species Status Assessment for the Grizzly Bear in the Lower-48 States: A Biological Report, 4 (2021) (“Status Assessment for the Grizzly Bear”). With European-American settlement, however, grizzlies were “shot, poisoned, and trapped wherever they were found,” eliminating them from everywhere but mountain redoubts far removed from human intolerance. Crow Indian Tribe v. United States, 343 F. Supp. 3d 999, 1004 (D. Mont. 2018) (quotation omitted).

By the time FWS listed grizzly bears in the contiguous United States as “threatened” under the ESA in 1975, grizzlies had been “reduced to less than two percent of their former range in the lower-48 States ... and the estimated population in the lower-48 states was 700 to 800 individuals.” Status Assessment for the Grizzly Bear, at 4.

Currently, grizzly bears in the contiguous States remain confined to a few isolated populations in Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho along with potential occupancy of the North Cascades in Washington. Based on these remnant populations, FWS has designated six areas as grizzly bear recovery zones. Id. at 3-4; see Figure 3 (below). Montana is home—in full or in part—to four of these recovery zones: (1) the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem; (2) the Cabinet-Yaak Ecosystem; (3) the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem; and (4) the Bitterroot Ecosystem. See Figure 3.

Consistent with the designated recovery zones, Montana’s grizzly populations are concentrated in northwest Montana’s Cabinet-Yaak and Northern Continental Divide Ecosystems and in southwest Montana’s Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem. Moreover, according to the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee, while “[g]rizzly bears in the Bitterroot Ecosystem [edging into west-central Montana] remain relatively uncommon” there have been “increasing reports [of grizzlies in the Bitterroots] in recent years.”⁶

⁶ <http://igbconline.org/bitterroot-ecosystem/> (last visited June 22, 2021).

Within their recovery zones, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service describes grizzly bears as habitat “generalists” that “occupy[] habitats from deserts to alpine mountains and everything in between.” Status Assessment for the Grizzly Bear, at 47. Grizzly bears’ varied diets aid their adaptability, and they “will consume almost any food available including vegetation, living or dead mammals or fish, insects, worms, plants, human-related foods, and garbage.” Id. at 48. In Montana, grizzly bears rely on ungulate carcasses, among other foods, for protein. Id. at 183 (observing that grizzly diets in the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem rely on bison, elk, mule deer, moose, pronghorn, and bighorn sheep), 191 (noting that grizzlies in the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem eat deer and elk). Grizzly bears—as with lynx and wolves—prefer habitats that offer forest cover. Id. at 47.

C. Overlap with Wolves

As with lynx and grizzly bears, Montana’s gray wolf habitat ranges across the western portion of the state. See Figure 4.

As this map makes clear, wolves’ geographical habitat range substantially overlaps lynx and grizzly bear habitat in Montana.

Within their overlapping habitat ranges, wolves, lynx, and grizzly bears frequently choose the same habitat types and occupy the same areas.

Wolves “exhibit[] no particular habitat preference except for the presence of native ungulates within [their] territory on a year-round basis.”⁸ However, wolves are most likely to select habitat with a high ungulate density—the primary prey and food source for wolves—as well as forest cover (similar to lynx and grizzlies). Oakleaf, et al. (2006). The generalized nature of wolf habitat preferences—which in turn resembles the adaptability of grizzly bears when selecting habitat—means that wolves, lynx, and grizzly bears often inhabit the same areas throughout Montana.

Wolf and grizzly bear habitat often overlaps due to the two species' reliance on ungulates as a consistent food source. See FWS Status Assessment for the Grizzly Bear, at 183. And while wolves and grizzly bears may thus compete for carrion and prey, researchers have found no evidence that the presence of wolves in an area negatively influences grizzly bear populations. Id. Rather, researchers in the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem have observed that any wolf-caused "reduction of winter-killed ungulates may be buffered by increased availability of meat to adult grizzly bears during the active season as a result of grizzly bears usually prevailing in usurping wolf-killed ungulate carcasses." Id. Thus, wolves and grizzly bears can—and frequently do—occupy the same habitat.

Wolf habitat also overlaps with that of lynx, and the presence of wolves in an area can play an important role in food availability for lynx. Lynx rely on snowshoe hare as their primary food source but often must compete with coyotes for their prey. Ripple, et al. (2011). However, wolves suppress coyote populations and can thereby increase hare populations. Id. Thus, where wolves and lynx intersect, wolves can ensure a greater abundance of hare, which in turn benefits nearby lynx. Id. FWS and other federal agencies have speculated that, with climate change reducing snow depth, the overlap between lynx and wolf habitat will only increase. See FWS et al., Canada Lynx Conservation Assessment and Strategy, 71 (2013) ("Interagency Lynx Conservation Assessment").

In short, lynx, grizzly bears, and wolves occupy similar geographic ranges and frequently occupy the same types of habitat within those ranges. This substantial overlap in habitat for these three species means that wolf-trapping in the state frequently occurs in areas also occupied by lynx and grizzlies.

II. Snares and Traps Capture, Injure, and Kill Non-Target Lynx and Grizzly Bears

Snares and traps are known to frequently capture, injure, or kill non-target species such as lynx and grizzly bears. Snares are particularly likely to kill or cause severe injuries to captured non-target animals. In recent years—even without allowing wolf-trappers to use snares—Montana's Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks ("FWP") has reported hundreds of captures, injuries, and deaths of non-target species in traps, including multiple instances of lynx and grizzly bears captured in leghold traps intended for wolves and other species.

A. Snares and Traps Are Inherently Non-Selective and Indiscriminate

According to trapping experts and researchers, snares⁹ and leghold traps¹⁰ are inherently non-selective and indiscriminate, meaning they can capture or kill a broad range of animals beyond the species targeted by the trapper. Iossa, et al. (2007) ("It has long been recognized that non-target captures can be very high in comparison to target captures.”); see also Proulx, et al. (2015).

¹⁰ "Leg-hold traps have two jaws that open to 180° when set, and clamp together to hold an animal's foot or leg when triggered. The trap is attached to the ground or an anchor by a chain or cable." Iossa, et al. (2007).

Proulx, et al. (2015) note that snares capture non-target species at high rates, and this trend is especially true of neck snares targeting canids, such as wolves. Surveys on the selectivity rates of coyote neck snares have reported rates of 52 percent (Guthery and Beasom (1978)) and 77 percent (Phillips (1996))—indicating that between 23 and 48 percent of the animals snared in coyote traps are non-target species.

Lynx and grizzly bears are among those non-target species incidentally captured or killed in snares targeting wolves and other canids.

A 2013 lynx assessment by FWS and other federal agencies concluded that “lynx are very vulnerable to trapping and snaring and can be easily overexploited.” Interagency Lynx Conservation Assessment, at 79. The agencies found that vulnerability extends to “[i]ncidental trapping or snaring of lynx” which “can occur in areas where regulated trapping for other species, such as wolverine, coyote, fox, fisher, marten, bobcat and wolf, overlaps with lynx habitats.” Id. at 71 (emphases added).

According to Proulx, et al. (2015), between 1990 and 2014, the Canadian Wildlife Health Cooperative reported at least 157 incidents of non-target snare captures, including eight instances of lynx killed in snares. Id. However, as that number reflects only specimens voluntarily submitted by trappers, it “probably represents [only] a small proportion of the snared animals that die and go unreported by people.” Id. Proulx, et al. (2015) also identified one instance in which a trapper in Alberta, Canada set 10-15 killing neck snares to capture wolves, and instead captured three non-target animals within a week, including one black bear and one grizzly bear.

B. Snares and Traps Frequently Injure or Kill Non-Target Animals

Snares and traps injure or kill non-target animals at high rates. Neck snares are often intended to kill the target animal, and therefore also kill the non-target animals that are frequently ensnared. See Proulx, et al., (2015).¹¹ Leghold snares and traps, which are not intended to kill, can nevertheless cause injuries that result in death or permanently impair the animal after release. However, because these injuries are not always immediately apparent, animals may be released into the wild with injuries that are incorrectly overlooked as non-existent or insignificant. See Proulx, et al. (2020); Andreassen, et al. (2017); Cattet, et al. (2008); Iossa, et al. (2007); Interagency Lynx Conservation Assessment, at 79.

According to Iossa, et al. (2007), leghold snares in particular may cause high mortality in non-target species. Consistent with this finding, FWS and other federal agencies have found that “[i]njuries and mortality rates are greatest to lynx incidentally caught in snares and Conibear [killer] traps.” Interagency Lynx Conservation Assessment, at 79; see also Rochlitz (2010)

(“The mortality and morbidity of animals caught in snares is higher than with most other restraining traps.”).¹²

Leghold snares and traps, by restraining animals by their limbs, can cause compression or constriction injuries that can damage tissue, restrict vascular flow, and can have harmful effects beyond the extremity that is actually constricted. Research indicates that as little as two to four hours of serious restriction can result in long-term loss of neuromuscular function or persistent pain. See Jacobson, et al. (1994).

In addition to constriction injuries, snares and traps also cause bone fractures, dislocations, tooth and gum damage from biting the snares and traps, hypothermia or hyperthermia, and dehydration. See Nocturnal Wildlife Research Party Ltd., Review: Welfare Outcomes of Leg-hold Trap Use in Victoria (2008) (“NWR Report”). Trapped animals and their offspring are also vulnerable to being killed by other animals. See Status Assessment for the Grizzly Bear, 150-51 (reporting that “[i]n 2013, a snared subadult female grizzly bear was killed by a large, probably male bear” and also noting “the killing of a [grizzly] cub by another bear while its mother was captured”). Moreover, the physiological effects of stress, trauma, and shock from being captured can cause death after release. See NWR Report; Proulx, et al. (2020); Cattet, et al. (2008).

Proulx, et al. (2020) write that “significant capture-related effects in ursids may go undetected at the time of capture, thus providing a false sense of the welfare of released animals.” Cattet, et al. (2008) found that grizzly bears captured in leghold snares more frequently exhibited biochemical indicators of muscle injury as compared with grizzlies captured by helicopter or barrel trap. The same researchers observed that the rate of movements made by bears decreased below normal levels immediately after capture and took between three to six weeks to normalize after release. This illustrates that even those animals released from snares with no apparent injuries may nevertheless incur significant injuries. Cattet, et al. (2008) reported that one grizzly died of capture myopathy—a physical reaction to the stress and trauma associated with snaring—approximately 10 days after being captured by a leghold snare. Similarly, FWS reported the death of a subadult male grizzly from exertional myopathy after being trapped in 2019. See Status Assessment for the Grizzly Bear, at 151.

As with grizzly bears, injuries to trapped lynx may frequently go undetected. See Interagency Lynx Conservation Assessment, 79 (“Some trap-related injuries (e.g., dislocations, fractures, mild freezing) are difficult to detect in lynx in the field.”). FWS and other federal agencies admit that “a substantial portion of lynx caught in foothold traps may experience injuries and foot freezing.” Id.

C. Montana Trappers Already Capture Non-Target Species—Including Lynx and Grizzly Bears

Even before the wave of new trapping and snaring activity authorized by the state’s new wolf-killing legislation, Montana trappers already capture, injure, and kill non-target animals—including lynx and grizzly bears—on a regular basis.

According to Montana FWP, in the six-year period between 2012 and 2017, trappers reported 349 captures of non-target species across the state. FWP, Incidental Captures of Wildlife and Domestic Dogs in Montana, 2012-2017, 1 (2018). Forty-five percent of these incidentally-captured individuals “died as a result of the capture,” and at least 33 percent of those released alive sustained visible injuries such as cuts and swelling of the feet and neck. Id.

FWP reported three lynx and three grizzly bears among those non-target captures—including one lynx and one grizzly caught in leghold traps intended for wolves. Id. at 1-2. At least one trapped grizzly bear sustained foot damage prior to release. See Non-Target Wildlife Captured in Traps (non-Wolf Traps) Reported to FWP, 2013-14. And while FWP classified the other captured grizzly bears and lynx as “uninjured/released” or simply “released,” FWP records do not indicate whether these animals were monitored following release.¹³ Without those additional data, it is impossible to determine the extent to which these animals avoided harm from capture. See Proulx, et al. (2020); Andreasen, et al. (2017); Cattet, et al. (2008); Iossa, et al. (2007). However, even the readily available data collected by FWP demonstrates that trapping and snaring of wolves in Montana will inevitably result in capture and injury to non-target species including lynx and grizzly bears.

III. The ESA Prohibits Incidental Take of Lynx and Grizzly Bears

Such capture and injury of lynx and grizzly bears violates the ESA. Section 9 of the ESA prohibits the unauthorized “take” of an endangered species. 16 U.S.C. 1538(a)(1)(B). The ESA defines “take” to mean “harass, harm, pursue, hunt, shoot, wound, kill, trap, capture, or collect, or to attempt to engage in such conduct.” Id. § 1532(19). “Take” includes direct as well as indirect harm and need not be purposeful. See Babbit v. Sweet Home Chapter of Communities for a Great Oregon, 515 U.S. 687, 704 (1995). A take may even be the result of an accident. See National Wildlife Federation v. Burlington Northern Railroad, 23 F.3d 1508, 1512 (9th Cir. 1994).

The ESA’s take prohibition applies equally to threatened species, unless otherwise indicated by a species-specific rule promulgated by the FWS pursuant to ESA § 4(d). See 50 C.F.R. 17.31(a). The species-specific rules for Canada lynx allow for no exception to the prohibition of take in the trapping or snaring context. The species-specific rules for grizzly bears permit take only for self-defense, defense of others, scientific research, and other limited circumstances. 50 C.F.R. 17.40(b). Accordingly, the ESA protects lynx and grizzly bears from take or attempted take by recreational trapping or snaring.

These ESA protections apply equally against trapping or snaring authorized by a state official or agency. It is unlawful for any person to “cause [an ESA violation] to be committed.” 16 U.S.C. § 1538(g). The term “person” includes “any officer, employee, agent, department, or instrumentality ... of any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State ... [or] any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State” Id. § 1532(13).

Thus, the ESA “not only prohibits the acts of those parties that directly exact the taking, but also bans those acts of a third party that bring about the acts exacting a taking.... [A] governmental third party pursuant to whose authority an actor directly exacts a taking ... may be deemed to have violated the provisions of the ESA.” Strahan v. Coxe, 127 F.3d 155, 163 (1st Cir. 1997) (emphasis added) (holding that Massachusetts exacted a taking by issuing licenses and permits authorizing gillnet and lobster pot fishing—activities known to incidentally injure Northern right whales). As in Strahan, state hunting and trapping schemes violate the ESA’s section 9 prohibition on take when “a risk of taking exists [even] if trappers comply with all applicable laws and regulations in place.” Animal Prot. Inst., Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Holsten, 541 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1079 (D. Minn. 2008) (holding Commissioner of the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources liable for incidental killing of lynx); see also Strahan v. Sec’y, Massachusetts Exec. Off. of Energy & Env’tl. Affs., 458 F. Supp. 3d 76, 95 (D. Mass. 2020)(holding Massachusetts Executive Office of Energy and Environmental Affairs and Director of Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries liable for incidental trapping of Northern right whales); Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. C.L. Otter, No. 1:14-CV-258-BLW, 2016 WL 233193 (D. Idaho Jan. 8, 2016) (holding Idaho Governor and others liable for incidental trapping of lynx), on reconsideration, sub nom. Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Otter, No. 1:14-CV-258-BLW, 2018 WL 539329 (D. Idaho Jan. 24, 2018); Red Wolf Coal. v. N. Carolina Wildlife Res. Comm’n, No. 2:13-CV-60-BO, 2014 WL 1922234 (E.D.N.C. May 13, 2014) (holding North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission liable for incidental take of red wolves).

The ESA has a broad citizen-suit provision, which provides that “any person may commence a civil suit on his own behalf to enjoin any person, including ... any ... governmental instrumentality or agency ... who is alleged to be in violation of any provision of [the ESA].” 16 U.S.C. § 1540(g). By filing such a civil action, a plaintiff may seek to enjoin both present activities that constitute an ongoing take and future activities that are likely to result in take. See Burlington Northern Railroad, 23 F.3d at 1511.

IV. Implementation of Montana’s Wolf-Killing Bills Violates the ESA’s Prohibition on Incidental Take of Threatened Species

Montana’s wolf-trapping bills are likely to cause incidental take—including harm, wounding, or killing—of threatened lynx and grizzly bears in violation of ESA section 9. Montana’s recently enacted HB 224 requires the Commission to “allow for the use of snares by the holder of a [wolf] trapping license.” MCA § 87-1-901(1). Recently enacted SB 314 requires the Commission to establish hunting and trapping seasons “with the intent to reduce the wolf population” in Montana. Id. These measures portend a new wave of snaring activity in Montana accompanied by an escalated level of trapping activity to achieve the state’s new wolf-population-reduction mandate.

Because lynx and grizzly bear habitat significantly overlaps with that of Montana's gray wolf population, changes to state-sanctioned wolf-trapping activities will alter trapping conditions in lynx and grizzly territory. Moreover, because snares pose particular dangers to non-target species, they threaten injury or death to lynx and grizzlies, even when targeting wolves. These adverse impacts are likely to occur even if trappers follow all applicable state laws and regulations. Thus, by authorizing the use of snares by wolf trappers, HB 224 increases the likelihood that Montana trappers—who already regularly capture non-target lynx and grizzly bears—will incidentally injure or kill lynx and grizzlies. SB 314 further heightens this danger by requiring the Commission to manage wolf trapping seasons to reduce the population, which portends increased trapping—including a surge in the incidental trapping of non-target species.

In short, implementation of HB 224 and SB 314 is likely to cause the incidental take—including the injuring or killing—of lynx and grizzly bears. Thus, activities authorized by the State of Montana to implement these bills violate section 9 of the ESA. 16 U.S.C. § 1538(a)(1)(B).

V. Conclusion

The Center for Biological Diversity, Friends of the Clearwater, Humane Society of the United States, International Wildlife Coexistence Network, Sierra Club, Western Watersheds Project, Wilderness Watch, and Wolves of the Rockies work to protect and conserve Canada lynx and grizzly bears in Montana. Activities to implement Montana's new wolf-killing legislation threaten to impede conservation of these species. Accordingly, the parties to this notice letter request that Montana take immediate action to prevent the future take of ESA-listed species as a consequence of the state's new wolf-killing legislation, which violates federal law. At a minimum, this would require the State to prohibit all trapping and snaring in occupied lynx and grizzly bear habitat.

If Montana does not remedy this violation within 60 days of the receipt of this letter, the parties to this notice letter intend to institute legal action in federal court to enforce the ESA.

Sincerely,

Ben Scrimshaw

Re: Protect Montana's wildlife heritage from extreme legislation

Dear Gov. Gianforte:

The 3,307 undersigned professional and amateur wildlife/landscape photographers and videographers urge you to conserve Montana's wildlife heritage for Montanans, photographers and videographers and the millions of visitors who make Montana's economy viable. A slew of bills designed to significantly expand Montana's already liberal hunting and trapping seasons, undermine conservation and restoration of Montana's majestic wolves, bears, bison and other wildlife will soon cross your desk. We urge you to veto each in turn, including HB 224 (wolf snaring), HB 225 (wolf-trapping-season expansion), SB 98 (loosens language around killing grizzly bears, contrary to federal law), SB 267 (wolf bounty), SB 314 (intends to reduce wolf population dangerously close to federally-determined minimums, allows unlimited wolf bag limit per hunter and night wolf hunting), SB 337 (undermines grizzly bear recovery in Montana), HB 468 (black bear hounding), and HB 302 (grants counties the authority to manage wild bison, our national mammal, but removes that authority from the state).

With this raft of legislation, Montana's lawmakers are signaling to the federal government and courts that wolves will need to be relisted and Montana can never be trusted to conserve grizzly bears without federal oversight and that counties can pre-empt the state's management authority over bison.

Furthermore, these proposals not only take a steep turn from years of more reasoned and ethical wildlife management in Montana, but, together, they move the state toward a trend of managing wildlife populations significantly downward—a path that resulted in listing of species under the Endangered Species Act in the first place due to harmful state management policies. This is happening despite new, overwhelming support for lands, wildlife and nature protections in Montana.¹

If these bills are signed into law, the consequences of such extreme legislation reach far beyond the targeted species. For instance, when trappers target wolves, they will invariably catch, injure, and possibly kill federally protected grizzly bears and Canada lynx, as well as mountain lions, elk, deer and family pets (including working dogs, bird dogs, and outdoor recreationists' dogs). The vast majority of your constituents, who represent the non-trapping Montanan public, will ultimately suffer the negative and unintended consequences of these bills.

This list of deadly wildlife bills would put Montanans into economic jeopardy if tourism dries up, as no outdoor recreationists will want to risk themselves, their children, or their companion animals getting caught in the deadly snares allowed under HB 224. “Come ski Montana’s back country, where your dog will die in snare,” is hardly an appealing advertisement.

Wildlife has significant ecotourism value beyond their pelt or trophy prices. In one study, authors calculated that a single bobcat in one year’s time in Yellowstone National Park was valued at $308,105, a figure 1,000 times greater than its pelt price of $315.² That one bobcat enabled wildlife-watching guides, photographers to sell their prints, and other employment, including hospitality services.³

Indeed, Montana is currently a top destination for wildlife-watching tourists, and tourism is key to its economy. In 2019, the University of Montana’s Institute for Tourism and Recreation Research found that 12.6 million visitors generated $3.76 Billion in revenue to Montana, funding 53,120 jobs and saving Montanans $626 in lowered household taxes.⁴

About one-half of tourists in Montana visit the state’s iconic national parks to watch wildlife, and many of them take photos of the animals and the landscapes they see. According to the National Park Service: “In 2019, 5.5 million park visitors spent an estimated $640 million in local gateway regions while visiting National Park Service lands in Montana. These expenditures supported a total of 9,620 jobs, $306 million in labor income, $496 million in value added, and $892 million in economic output in the Montana economy.”⁵ The Montana Department of Commerce’s (MDC) site raves about the film industry, which contributed $48 million to Montana’s economy between 2019 and 2020.⁶ The MDC even showcased the television series, Yellowstone, which received “2.2 billion online impressions from 650 news and magazine articles” and is focused on Montana’s wildlife and their habitats.⁷

According to the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis, the total outdoor recreation expenditure in Montana in 2019 was $2,498,355,000, and of that amount, hunting and trapping amounted to $29,365,000 or about 1.2 percent of the total expenditure. In other words, most people in Montana are not spending their money to hunt and trap wildlife.⁸

These bills are completely unnecessary as hunters and trappers already have ample opportunities to kill Montana’s wolves and black bears—hunters and trappers killed about one-third of the wolf population in the last recorded season alone and more than 1,400 black bears annually since 2015, according to Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks (FWP). Across the state, elk populations are reported to be at or above objective. In fact, in its 2020 Big Game Hunting Forecast, FWP reported that: “These are good times for elk hunters, as Montana elk populations continue to be strong across most of the state.”⁹ It’s time to stop scapegoating wolves, bears and bison for perceived conflicts. We need to learn to live with these species, or they will be gone forever—just as they have disappeared from most other states.

There is widespread, diverse, and strong opposition to these unnecessary bills. Opponents outnumbered supporters by more than 10 to one for several of the bills, including HB 224 and HB 225. Opponents to wolf snaring included ethical hunters, a former Wildlife Services trapper, wildlife conservation groups, individual Montana residents, the Montana Wildlife Federation, the Montana Sportsmen Alliance and houndsmen. This overwhelming public sentiment should be heeded.

Please protect Montana's wildlife heritage. This raft of bills goes too far for the majority of Montanans who rely on their elected officials to conserve their majestic wildlife heritage.

Sincerely,

Subject: [EXTERNAL] 2021 Wolf Season—Proposed Rules
Date: Wednesday, July 28, 2021 11:38:54 AM

Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

I am writing to comment on the proposed rules for managing wolves under recently-passed legislation.

The 2021 Legislature went too far, passing extreme anti-wolf measures that are out of step with what most Montanans want. Wolf mortality is already at an all-time high—400 wolves died in 2019 (300 by hunting & trapping). Expanding seasons and adding new wolf killing measures is unnecessary and unwise.

Please keep snares off of the public lands where many Montanans like to recreate. They create a hazard for people, pets and wildlife. And since snares are cheap, trappers may place thousands out on the landscape, neglecting to pick them up after the trapping season closes.

Please retain the limited quotas for wolves adjacent to our National Parks—millions of tourists spend money in Montana's gateway communities around the National Parks, hoping to catch a glimpse of a wolf, bear and other wildlife.

Please also continue to prohibit the use of bait and hunting at night.

The recovery of wolves in Montana is one of the great American wildlife conservation achievements, about which Montanans are proud to have played a key role. Let's keep it that way with a conservative and cautious approach to wolf management.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide comment. I hope you listen to the people!

Hello,

Please consider those of us who use public lands that object to trapping wildlife. The public has the right to recreate safely from traps, snares, bait, and any other hunting that doesn't require a person to be present. All of those methods should be heavily regulated on public lands to support wildlife and recreation values. Wolves are part of the ecosystem and should be managed as such. As an avid recreator in Montana, I need to know that my dog won't be caught in some device. Randomly allowing them across the landscape is irresponsible and fails to adhere to the reason for your agency, to manage wildlife.

Please choose to "Limit New Tools".

Thank You.

Hello,

I had some issue with the website and was unable to get my comment in, but have switched to a friendlier computer. I would like to comment that the "Limited New Tools" option should be selected. FWP has done an outstanding job managing our game species, wolves included. The politician who put forward this legislation is on the record as stating it was intended to substantially decrease the wolf population, but wildlife management is the job of FWP scientists and other staff, and is NOT something to be randomly thrown around by politicians looking to appease their voting base. That a politician would even try to direct the actions of the most successful big game management body in the country is ludicrous. I applaud FWP's decision to limit snares to private land, which is exactly as it should be - on public land they are far, far too big a potential problem for hikers, dogs, and endangered species like lynx.

Thank you for your time.

Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission

Dear Wildlife Commission,

I'm writing to express my opposition to sweeping new laws that create the potential to expand the slaughter of wolves in Montana through cruel and barbaric hunting practices and to urge the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and
- 4) Limiting the hunting of wolves to one wolf per license, with the lowest bag limit allowed per law applied across the state.

Wolves are an important native wildlife species in Montana and wolves are an important part of healthy ecosystems. Wildlife lovers from around the world come to Montana for the chance to see wolves, providing an important economic benefit to the state.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing these cruel and barbaric new laws.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and
- 4) Limiting the hunting of wolves to one wolf per license, with the lowest bag limit allowed per law applied across the state.

Wolves are an important native wildlife species in Montana and wolves are an important part of healthy ecosystems. Wildlife lovers from around the world come to Montana for the chance to see wolves, providing an important economic benefit to the state.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing these cruel and barbaric new laws.

Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission

Dear Wildlife Commission,

Greetings .

While I agree with the standard form content I'd like to express another perspective that perhaps will better sway your opinion. I spend a lot of time in the mountains. I've lived off grid for more than half my life in Colorado and California. My neighbors were bears, mountain lions, coyotes and even wolves. I worked cattle ranches and big ag farms and I cooked at logging operations . I raised my kids with a healthy respect for nature and for folks trying to make a living. And I know first hand these two things can be hand in hand. Ranchers who are wolf friendly and advertised as such were able to get more $ per lb for their beef. Logging companies that chose to leave blocks with active wolf packs saw better public opinion and weren't saddled with lawsuits and poor public reaction.

As a mom who still camps and recreates in your state I want to express my desire to hear wolves howling while I'm settling down for bed. I want my children's children to know what wolves are and their function in our ecosystem. I want them to respect those who had the power to save this species. You have the power to save this species. And you should.

Thank you.

I'm writing to express my opposition to sweeping new laws that create the potential to expand the slaughter of wolves in Montana through cruel and barbaric hunting practices and to urge the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission

Dear Wildlife Commission,

I'm writing to express my opposition to sweeping new laws that create the potential to expand the slaughter of wolves in Montana through cruel and barbaric hunting practices and to urge the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and
- 4) Limiting the hunting of wolves to one wolf per license, with the lowest bag limit allowed per law applied across the state.

Wolves are an important native wildlife species in Montana and wolves are an important part of healthy ecosystems. Wildlife lovers from around the world come to Montana for the chance to see wolves, providing an important economic benefit to the state.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing these cruel and barbaric new laws.

Sincerely,

Dear Wildlife Commission,

I'm writing to express my opposition to sweeping new laws that create the potential to expand the slaughter of wolves in Montana through cruel and barbaric hunting practices and to urge the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and
- 4) Limiting the hunting of wolves to one wolf per license, with the lowest bag limit allowed per law applied across the state.

These intelligent beings evolved at least 9 million years ago, we on the other hand - a primitive and dangerous primate, only about 1 million and a half...these beings from the Family Canidae, should be left alone with enough range and territory to live a quiet life in peace rather than be subjected to this relentless persecution, no species should deliberately harmed in this way - to do so is not only unethical and immoral, it's a crime against the biosphere and speaks volumes about us - our penchant for savagery, lack of intelligence, and an understanding of how the Biosphere works.

Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission

Dear Wildlife Commission,

I'm writing to express my opposition to sweeping new laws that create the potential to expand the slaughter of wolves in Montana through cruel and barbaric hunting practices and to urge the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and
- 4) Limiting the hunting of wolves to one wolf per license, with the lowest bag limit allowed per law applied across the state.

Wolves are an important native wildlife species in Montana and wolves are an important part of healthy ecosystems. Wildlife lovers from around the world come to Montana for the chance to see wolves, providing an important economic benefit to the state.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing these cruel and barbaric new laws.

Sincerely,

Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission

Dear Wildlife Commission,

It's absolutely outrageous that Montana is on a path to sabotage years of effort to restore wolf populations by passing laws allowing widespread brutal and heartless killing of what is still in reality, an endangered species. The Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission must act to stop the implementation of these laws and stop this useless slaughter of these amazing creatures.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves by:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and

I'm writing to express my opposition to sweeping new laws that create the potential to expand the slaughter of wolves in Montana through cruel and barbaric hunting practices and to urge the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and
- 4) Limiting the hunting of wolves to one wolf per license, with the lowest bag limit allowed per law applied across the state.

Wolves are an important native wildlife species in Montana and wolves are an important part of healthy ecosystems. Wildlife lovers from around the world come to Montana for the chance to see wolves, providing an important economic benefit to the state.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing these cruel and barbaric new laws.

Dear Wildlife Commission,

I strongly oppose the so called wolf management laws which are expected to result in much greater number of wolf deaths in Montana through horrible hunting practices. The Commission needs to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands; the snares will be dangerous for family pets as well as many other species of wildlife. Many hikers let their dogs off leash on public lands.
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and
- 4) Limiting the hunting of wolves to one wolf per license, with the lowest bag limit allowed per law applied across the state.

Wolves are an important native wildlife species in Montana and wolves are an important part of healthy ecosystems. Wildlife lovers from around the world come to Montana for the chance to see wolves, providing an important economic benefit to the state.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing these cruel and barbaric new laws.

Dear Wildlife Commission,

I'm writing to express my opposition to sweeping new laws that create the potential to expand the slaughter of wolves in Montana through cruel and barbaric hunting practices and to urge the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

Dear Montana Fish and Wildlife Service:

I oppose expanding the wolf hunting/trapping season.

I oppose night hunting of wolves.

I oppose the use of snares.

I oppose the use of leg traps.

I oppose increasing bag limits for hunters.

I oppose bating wolves, running them over, aerial gunning, killing them in their dens, or any other method that violates fair chase ethics.

Montana already aggressively hunts wolves. I don't believe you should hunt them at all (they are necessary for healthy ecosystems and they are beautiful animals), but from the bottom of my heart, please don't kill more.

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

As a potential tourist and citizen with family members in Montana, I am concerned about MT's policies concerning wolves. Montana already has aggressive hunting and trapping seasons for wolves — and its wolf population is decreasing. The state doesn't need to expand the seasons or approve new tools for killing wolves.

Baiting wolves and killing wolves at night is a concern because they violate fair-chase ethics and increase the risk of killing other wildlife and even family dogs.

I also oppose increasing the bag limit for wolves — a single hunter shouldn't be able to wipe out an entire pack of wolves. And hunters should be required to obtain one license, at significant expense given the amount taxpayers paid to restore wolves, for each wolf killed.

Snaring is cruel and I don't support it in any form of snaring, and I ask you to ban snaring on public lands and limit snaring elsewhere as much as possible.

These common-sense measures will help save the lives of grizzly bears, Canada lynx and other wildlife, as well as companion animals.

Thank you for considering my comment.

Montana already has aggressive hunting and trapping seasons for wolves — and its wolf population is already decreasing. The state doesn't need to expand the seasons or approve new tools for killing wolves.

For example, I oppose rules allowing baiting wolves and killing wolves at night because they violate fair-chase ethics and increase the risk of killing other wildlife and even family dogs.

I also oppose increasing the bag limit for wolves — a single hunter shouldn't be able to wipe out an entire pack of wolves. And hunters should be required to obtain one license for each wolf killed.

I don't support any form of snaring, and I ask you to ban snaring on public lands and limit snaring elsewhere as much as possible.

These common-sense measures will help save the lives of grizzly bears, Canada lynx and other wildlife, as well as companion animals.

Instead of of killing them, reach out aggressively to conservation sites. It will remove the wild population that is considered "problematic", while ensuring the population of the species.

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

I was born and raised in Montana, and I am proud of my Montana heritage and roots. However, this proposal, quite frankly, makes me angry. My father is a hunter who emphasized deep ethics principles in hunting and an honoring and respect for the life that a hunter takes. The new proposals for killing wolves are cruel and unethical, lacking recognition for the lives and dignity of the wolves, as well as other animals who could be impacted by snares.

Montana already has aggressive hunting and trapping seasons for wolves — and its wolf population is already decreasing. The state doesn't need to expand the seasons or approve new tools for killing wolves.

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

I am utterly repulsed, ashamed and reviled by the new Wolf cull rules in both Idaho and Montana.

I'm truly heartbroken and ashamed by Montana and to be in any way associated with— a state permitting the massacre of its wildlife.

I also find the new Wolf Cull rules abhorrently hypocritical and in stark opposition to science, as non-lethal wolf deterrent/management technologies and methodologies have been shown to be highly effective and endorsed by science.

Peer-reviewed, published scientific research does not support and actually opposes Idaho and Montana's wolf cull proposals as do the vast majority of Wildlife Biologists and Ecologists.

How can MFW, a scientific based organization, deny science and scientific research???

How can MFW retain any respect, reputation or semblance of scientific expertise???

If you only knew how much these bills have disgraced the states of Montana and Idaho in the minds of people across the country...

Friends of mine, everywhere from Texas to Arizona to Colorado to Wyoming are so disgusted by these wolf obliteration initiatives—disgust which they so frequently and freely express that it's to the point where I'm ashamed to ever tell someone that I have a home in Idaho.

A close friend of mine had planned to stay at my Sun Valley house for a week with her family and she canceled to go to Tahoe CA instead— entirely because of this bills.

She said "I just cannot in good conscience support state-sponsored killing of the wolf population or give my money to support any state doing such. I have to be able to look my daughters in the eye every night. I'm sorry. Hope you don't take this personally. If it makes you feel any better, I also won't go to Montana..."

And I can't blame her. Because I'm just as repulsed by it!

I'm not an unreasonable fanatic or unsympathetic to the interest of our ranchers— who are vital to the state of Montana and to our great nation.

But— reasonable, responsible solutions to Wolf Depredation and predator-livestock conflicts are entirely different.

I could accept reasonable increases in harvests, methods, seasons etc but the extremism of this wolf slaughter bill is unjustifiable! I would also be willing to donate $100K toward a fund providing non-lethal deterrent management or depredation reimbursement for affected ranchers. I also believe many people and organizations would also raise money to do so.

But, there's nothing understandable, defensible, justifiable, reasonable, responsible or scientific about Montana's new wolf cull legislation.

Shame on MFW for ever claiming to be a scientific based organization, as there is nothing scientific about this.

You're ruining a state that I love. It's literally heartbreaking...

I won't even go to Yellowstone or support the state's economy in any way so long as this continues.

Thank you for your time. I do appreciate it.

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

If people in Montana are having issues with wolves attacking livestock, they should first attempt to protect their property with fences. This is a basic method of protection invented thousands of years ago, and should be within the capability of citizens of your State. Most fences are made by people to keep their livestock in, but do little to actually protect their property. I've never had a large predator like wolves cross a fence that I've made, because I understand how to properly do this.

It seems like some of the people hunting wolves are doing so to avoid their duty to properly protect their property, and take an easy way out by blaming the wolves for doing something natural and extremely predictable. Please consider taking more reasonable steps before moving on to killing animals.

Even if you fail to get that message across to the people of Montana, there are some other points about your proposed call for killing wolves that I oppose. Montana already has aggressive hunting and trapping seasons for wolves — and its wolf population is already decreasing. The state doesn't need to expand the seasons or approve new tools for killing wolves. Please consider disallowing more extreme methods such as the following:

For example, I oppose rules allowing baiting wolves and killing wolves at night because they violate fair-chase ethics and increase the risk of killing other wildlife and even family dogs.

I also oppose increasing the bag limit for wolves — a single hunter shouldn't be able to wipe out an entire pack of wolves. And hunters should be required to obtain one license for each wolf killed.

I don't support any form of snaring, and I ask you to ban snaring on public lands and limit snaring elsewhere as much as possible.

These common-sense measures will help save the lives of grizzly bears, Canada lynx and other wildlife, as well as companion animals.

Thank you for considering my advise and comments.

Montana already has aggressive hunting and trapping seasons for wolves — and its wolf population is already decreasing. The state doesn't need to expand the seasons or approve new tools for killing wolves.

For example, I oppose rules allowing baiting wolves and killing wolves at night because they violate fair-chase ethics and increase the risk of killing other wildlife and even family dogs.

I also oppose increasing the bag limit for wolves — a single hunter shouldn't be able to wipe out an entire pack of wolves. And hunters should be required to obtain one license for each wolf killed.

I don't support any form of snaring, and I ask you to ban snaring on public lands and limit snaring elsewhere as much as possible.

These common-sense measures will help save the lives of grizzly bears, Canada lynx and other wildlife, as well as companion animals.

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

Trapping and hunting REFORM is desperately needed in Montana. I will withhold tourism funds and plans until this is rectified.

Montana already has aggressive hunting and trapping seasons for wolves — and its wolf population is already decreasing. The state doesn't need to expand the seasons or approve new tools for killing wolves.

For example, I oppose rules allowing baiting wolves and killing wolves at night because they violate fair-chase ethics and increase the risk of killing other wildlife and even family dogs.

I also oppose increasing the bag limit for wolves — a single hunter shouldn't be able to wipe out an entire pack of wolves. And hunters should be required to obtain one license for each wolf killed.

I don't support any form of snaring, and I ask you to ban snaring on public lands and limit snaring elsewhere as much as possible.

These common-sense measures will help save the lives of grizzly bears, Canada lynx and other wildlife, as well as companion animals.

Thank you for considering my comment.

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

Wolves are a keystone species, they are needed to keep the rest of the ecosystem healthy. Why is it okay to treat wolves so inhumanly when other animals are treated with so much more respect. Montana already has aggressive hunting and trapping seasons for wolves — and its wolf population is already decreasing. Why do you need to expand the seasons or approve new tools for killing wolves.

For one why do you need to increasing the bag limit for wolves — a single hunter shouldn't be able to wipe out an entire pack of wolves. And hunters should be required to obtain one license for each wolf killed. We need to respect animals and make it clear that they are important to us so that hunters don't feel it is okay to break the rules that we do still have and respect these natural wonders

Another this is baiting wolves and killing wolves at night is inhuman because they violate fair-chase ethics and increase the risk of killing other wildlife and even family dogs.

Lastly I don't support any form of snaring, and I ask you to ban snaring on public lands and limit snaring elsewhere as much as possible.

Subject: [EXTERNAL] I vehemently Oppose the Wolf Hunting and Trapping Proposals
Date: Wednesday, July 28, 2021 8:15:35 AM

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

I am writing to express my deep opposition to all of the wolf hunting and trapping proposals that are under consideration now by the Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission. As there is already an appallingly aggressive hunting and trapping season for wolves in the state of Montana, one that has been terribly effective in diminishing the number of wolves already, I can see absolutely no scientific or ethical justification for these proposals to expand the season or in any way permit any new means or tools or processes for killing wolves. Indeed, I am appalled that such proposals have been made and am gravely concerned that in a time when human beings are driving species to extinction, we are failing to do all we can to protect the critical species (such as the wolf) we yet have here to sustain and support the already fragile and imperiled web of life, which we ourselves rely on for our own species ongoing existence. The proposed rules are untimely and shockingly unethical.

For example, I oppose rules allowing baiting wolves and killing wolves at night because they violate fair-chase ethics and increase the risk of killing other wildlife and even family dogs.

I also oppose increasing the bag limit for wolves — a single hunter shouldn't be able to wipe out an entire pack of wolves. And hunters should be required to obtain one license for each wolf killed.

I don't support any form of snaring, and I ask you to ban snaring on public lands and limit snaring elsewhere as much as possible.

These common-sense measures will help save the lives of grizzly bears, Canada lynx and other wildlife, as well as companion animals.

Thank you for considering my comment.

Sincerely,

Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission

Dear Wildlife Commission,

I'm writing to express my opposition to sweeping new laws that create the potential to expand the slaughter of wolves in Montana through cruel and barbaric hunting practices and to urge the Commission to exercise its authority to protect wolves.

While some may call these new laws wolf "management," the intent is obvious: the decimation of wolf populations across Montana.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing new laws. This includes:

- 1) Forgoing the expansion of the wolf hunting and trapping season;
- 2) Banning the use of snares on public lands;
- 3) Prohibiting the use of baits for hunting and trapping and prohibiting night hunting across the state; and
- 4) Limiting the hunting of wolves to one wolf per license, with the lowest bag limit allowed per law applied across the state.

Wolves are an important native wildlife species in Montana and wolves are an important part of healthy ecosystems. Wildlife lovers from around the world come to Montana for the chance to see wolves, providing an important economic benefit to the state.

I urge the Commission to use its discretion to protect as many wolves as possible in implementing these cruel and barbaric new laws.

Subject: [EXTERNAL] Public Comment - Proposed Wolf Hunting Season/Quotas Changes
Date: Monday, July 26, 2021 5:58:54 PM

Thank you for the opportunity to comment and help support responsible and sustainable wildlife management that is consistent with the MT Wolf Conservation and Management Plan, and the MTFWP Vision and Guide 2016-2026.

I have not been following the wolf hunting issue very closely, and have not felt a need to until now. The recently passed legislation has piqued my interest and concern, and I've done my best this past week to come up to speed on this somewhat complex issue. Please accept my comments with that in mind.

I've read the Vision And Guide 2016-2026 document and the MONTANA WOLF CONSERVATION AND MANAGEMENT PLANNING DOCUMENT, and feel they are excellent, and have served the Department well in the past. I hope the Commission continues to follow these guidelines when drafting the final hunting regulations.

HB224, HB225, SB314 clearly indicate that the current administration is concerned about wolf numbers in the State, and has authorized the Department to use what I would call "extreme management tools" that may be used to ensure the State's wolf population is kept at a "sustainable level". When looking at the most current wolf numbers I could find, and reading (and sometimes comprehending) the Department's research paper, Improving Estimation of Wolf Recruitment and Abundance, and Development of an Adaptive Harvest Management Program for Wolves in Montana, it appears the wolf numbers are at or below a sustainable number in most areas, so it doesn't appear there is a need to use such extreme management tools for the upcoming hunting season. If I have this wrong and there are areas where the wolf population is approaching or exceeding the scientifically defensible "sustainable limit" number, please address the issue by being more aggressive with your conservative tools in those areas and only move to the more liberal tools if the limited tools are not working. Save the extreme tools for extreme problems; avoid extreme problems with good research, planning, and management - just as you have done in the past.

I don't understand the rationale for the 450 statewide harvest number. It appears somewhat arbitrary and ineffective in helping to manage very diverse population densities throughout the state. Would quota limits in each WMU be more effective and help to eliminate the need for emergency meetings?

I believe snares, baiting, and night hunting should be management tools that are only used by the agency under extreme circumstances. I realize the HB224 now allows trappers to use them. I do support the democratic process and hope the diverse commission regulates these permits wisely and considers potential impact to all wildlife and pets.

... looks like I'm out of time

To Whom It May Concern:

I recently learned of the proposed wolf hunting and trapping regulations and the option for public comment. I hope in the spirit of public comment this is accepted.

<https://fwp.mt.gov/wolfproposal>

As a born and raised Montanan, I value our hunting and fishing opportunities. However, I also feel we are responsible for the preservation and responsible management of our precious resources including keystone wildlife like the wolf.

I oppose this wolf proposal because it is in the best interest of sport hunters NOT Montana's fragile ecosystems. Of course, landowners on private property should still be permitted rights to protect their livestock, but this proposal is extreme and inhumane. Night trapping, baiting all of these practices are extreme. This is not responsible stewardship of our finite species and resources in the state. The risk for capturing non-target species will likely go up and there has to be a better way to manage populations in our great state.

Please do not adopt these policies and consider more humane and ethical ways to manage wildlife populations. In addition, please add me to your mailing list for future public comment opportunities that impact me.

Respectfully,

Dear Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

Montana has, against all scientific evidence, promoted aggressive hunting and trapping seasons for wolves, and the wolf population is already decreasing. The state doesn't need to expand the seasons or approve new tools for killing wolves.

Hunting should be sport (or a way of life), not a massacre. The proposed rules allowing baiting wolves and killing wolves at night - that's just plain unethical, and unnecessarily increases the risk of killing other wildlife (even family dogs). No!

I also oppose increasing the bag limit for wolves. A single hunter shouldn't be able to wipe out an entire pack of wolves. Again - that's not sport, that's a massacre. And what purpose does that serve? A problem wolf, one that has been proven to repeatedly take livestock or threaten people, yes, that animal should be taken. But a whole pack? Disgusting and stupid.

Snaring - that's asking for trouble. Montana should not be condoning any form of snare traps, as they are indiscriminate and cruel. Far more likely to kill or maim many other animals rather than the target. Bad. The Commission really ought to ban snaring on public lands and limit snaring elsewhere as much as possible.

Remember that wolves play a vital role in the ecosystem, keeping things in check and preventing deer and other animals from overgrazing and destroying the land. Instead of promoting the fear and loathing of these wild animals, the Fish and Wildlife Commission ought to ensure sound management of the wolf population taking into account the entirety of the state's wildlife resources. Such policies should also be adopted to manage grizzly bears, Canada lynx and other wildlife, to ensure a healthy ecosystem and future for Montana's citizens.

Thank you for considering my comment.

The passage by partisan vote of HB224, allow snaring of wolves, will snare and destroy far more than wolves.

Snares are already legal year-round in Montana and the number one killer of trapped non-target wildlife. Within just 30 months, at least 23 dogs were also snared in Montana and at least 2 died.

I urge Montana to do everything possible to reduce the horrendous and indiscriminate damage snares, extending the wolf trapping season, liberalizing wolf quotas, and all of which will go well beyond unnecessarily and inhumanely exterminating wolves.

I insist that the Commission sets the wolf season based on facts, biology, ecology, ethics, and responsible stewardship entrusted to them, not self serving special interests who dominated control in the Montana 2021 legislature.

Thank you for your service, and for the opportunity to provide comments on the 2021-2022 Wolf Hunting and Trapping Regulations Proposal. I am the business owner of an educational guiding outfit employing three employees and myself, a 27-year Gardiner, MT resident, a mother, and the wife of a nationally renowned ecologist. Our lives are inextricably intertwined with a healthy predator population.

Thank you for taking my views into consideration.

1. I support implementation of all of the options under ‘Limited New Tools’ for wolf management in the proposed wolf hunting season options table.
2. I strongly support maintaining the current quota of 2 wolves in management units 313 and 316, near Yellowstone NP and the current quotas near Glacier. I am a business owner and year-round resident of wolf management unit 313, where living wolves are of tremendous economic and social value both to me personally and many of my neighbors. In the Gardiner and Silver Gate gateway communities, a healthy wolf population is the highest value, economically, for research, and because people want wild wolves in the ecosystem. My livelihood and personal life are based on living with a healthy carnivore/predator population.
3. The proposed hunting quota of 450 wolves annually must be reduced. This plan would take 50% of the population, which is not sustainable at a population level according do MTFWP’s own data, stated objectives (harvests not to exceed 29% of the population) and other peer reviewed north American research (e.g. “Population Dynamics and Harvest Characteristics of Wolves in the Central Brooks Range, Alaska”). Montana’s wolf population is of value to a diverse array of stakeholders from trophy hunters to wolf watchers. Their populations should be managed as a resource (like mountain lions), not driven toward extirpation. High harvest quotas like this make FWP seem as though it is managing wolves as vermin and abandoning the North American Model of Wildlife Management. Overharvest will lead to wolves being federally relisted, which will restrict management options in the future. I was here when the wolves were brought back in, and this is an unacceptable consequence. Of note: elk populations in the state already exceed FWP’s goals in nearly every region, AND depredations are low (averaging 60 domestic animals per year, including cattle).
4. The wolf season needs to be shorter. MTFWP allows killing of wolves Sept-Nov, when the pelts are useless. It is considered wasteful and unethical. Please be mindful of ethical hunting mores.
5. Impractical emergency meetings are an embarrassment to you, and all residents. Consider proactive, rather than reactive management. We all deserve better, especially the wildlife.
6. Trapping or snaring should not be allowed in areas where there are lynx and grizzly bears. You know full well non-target capture and mortality is likely because trappers are not required to check their equipment regularly. In other areas, these activities should be allowed ONLY on private lands, with landowner permission and liability. These activities pose significant risk to all other users of public lands, to livestock, domestic animals and non-target wildlife species. They significantly limit multiple uses on public lands, which is completely unfair to other users/stakeholders.

7. I oppose all baiting and night hunting. It is unsporting and inhumane. People and dogs will die from these activities. They are way too dangerous. Baiting will also lead to more bear problems that will increase costs and workload for already under-resourced state agencies. I acknowledge that MTFWP staff are already working very hard with extremely limited resources. Their jobs do not need to become more difficult or dangerous.

Thank you for the chance to make a difference for my business, for my personal life, and most especially for my daughter, whom I hope to continue raising in a wild place, one that holds value in all components, including predators like wolves. We've been together as a family during interactions with wolves in the wild. They have been safe, exhilarating and profound. This is why I live here, raise a family here and conduct business here. Please be reasonable as you move forward, and avoid arcane laws that could ruin what we've worked so hard to build.

Subject: [EXTERNAL] 2021 Wolf Season—Proposed Rules

Montana Fish & Wildlife Commission,

I am writing to comment on the proposed rules for managing wolves under recently-passed legislation.

The 2021 Legislature went too far, passing extreme anti-wolf measures that are out of step with what most Montanans want. Wolf mortality is already at an all-time high—400 wolves died in 2019 (300 by hunting & trapping). Expanding seasons and adding new wolf killing measures is unnecessary and unwise.

Please keep snares off of the public lands where many Montanans like to recreate. They create a hazard for people, pets and wildlife. And since snares are cheap, trappers may place thousands out on the landscape, neglecting to pick them up after the trapping season closes.

Please retain the limited quotas for wolves adjacent to our National Parks—millions of tourists spend money in Montana's gateway communities around the National Parks, hoping to catch a glimpse of a wolf, bear and other wildlife.

Please also continue to prohibit the use of bait and hunting at night.

The recovery of wolves in Montana is one of the great American wildlife conservation achievements, about which Montanans are proud to have played a key role. Let's keep it that way with a conservative and cautious approach to wolf management.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide comment.
