Position Summary: First Peoples Buffalo Jump State Park, a National Historic Landmark and archaeological site, located about 15 miles from Great Falls MT, is a nearly 3000-acre site which contains the largest buffalo jump in North America. Located where the prairie transitions to the eastern Rocky Mountain Front and among the scenic buttes and island mountain ranges, it is a vitally important cultural, prehistoric site that was used during the “Dog Days “of several Plains and Plateau tribes. A 6000 square foot visitor center contains exhibits that tell the story of how tribes conducted a buffalo jump hunt and processed the animals after they were stampeded off the cliff. There is also a gift shop operated by park staff. A 3 - mile interpretive trail tells additional history as visitors are hiking through the area. An additional 4-miles of trail in the park winds along the Jump and through a prairie dog town. The Park hosts students from all over Montana and neighboring states as the site is a favorite field trip destination. Visitors from all 50 states and numerous foreign countries enjoy the site to learn about the tribal culture. Another component of park operations is Tower Rock State Park. This natural feature was prominently noted in an 1805 journal entry of Captain Meriwether Lewis, co-leader of the Corps of Discovery.

Giant Springs State Park is a gem in the Montana State Park system. The park is situated just outside of Great Falls (Montana’s 3rd largest city) and is comprised of 4,600 acres of diverse land. The park’s landscape varies from dense trees and manicured lawns to natural prairie along the banks of the Missouri River. Giant Springs is home to much more than just its namesake springs, it also boasts over 30 miles of the River’s Edge Trail system, a fish hatchery, a thriving education/interpretation program, a full slate of special events, and a rich history including the Lewis and Clark Expedition. This State Park is loved and cherished by many, receiving over 500,000 visitors annually. Visitors engage in a variety of recreational activities including fishing, hiking, biking, hunting, picnicking, bird watching, and photography.
